expected to present the agreement as a success and it was being said last night that the carefully-worded document could allow both sides to claim an advantage. On the union side there was confidence that the deal will tie the employers more firmly to the scheme.

Union officials are also expected to point to repeated statements by the Government, from the Prime Minister down guaranteeing at least the shortterm future of the dock labour scheme, which has been coming under increasing pressure in recent months from the Government and employers.

The deal was also said to be feather in the cap of Mr Pat Lowry, chairman of Acas, and his conciliation staff who had worked hard to prevent the breakdown, which in the early hours yesterday had looked inevitable.

The decision to half the ban on freight traffic using Sealink ships was announced yesterday by the National Union of Seamen and the National Union of Railwaymen to allow time for talks with Sea Con-tainers, which bought Sealink this week for £66m.

The change of emphasis indicated on Thursday by the Prime Minister and other members of the Cabinet is being maintained in ministerial speeches and braodcasts highlighting what they claim to be the generosity of the Govern-ment's attitude to the mining investment and the voluntary redundancy terms offered, and the allegedly undemocratic behaviour by a minority in the strike whom the Prime Minister "the enemy dubbed

Britain set for new EEC clash over milk quotas

By John Young, Agriculture Corresponden

Another bitter quarrel will either refuse to pay the levy between Britain and its EEC or will demand that their partners, and France in particular, seems ready to erupt over milk quotas (John Young, our Correspondent, Agriculture

Figures published yesterday by the Milk Marketing Board indicates that sales of farms in England and Wales in the April-June period this year were about 6.25 per cent down on the corresponding period last year. This is less than the 9 per cent reduction required under the quota system, but spring and early summer are normally the peak production time.

Moreover, the estimated June sales are just over 9 per cent down on June last year.

However, according to the European Commission, milk production in the EEC as a whole has actually risen by 2 per cent since the quotas were introduced in April and shows no sign of falling. French farmers required to make a 3 per cent cut, have increased their output.

There is nothing to prevent farmers producing more than their quota entitlement other than the threat of a penal levy that farmers in other countries

At the last count yesterday, there were about 42,000 people working in the pits, including colliery officials who are not directly involved in the dispute: The number of strikers who have returned to work since July 2 is only 384.

That tally suggests that the letters from area and pit managers, together with the appeal from the National Coal Board chairman, Mr Ian Mac-Gregor, have had some impact in the coalfields where support for the 19-week stoppage is nncertain.

There are still more than 120,000 miners on strike as the dispute goes into the late summer. It seems certain after the breakdown of talks that the statement, said, industry will be incapable of

The Fianna Fail leader admitted his original solution had not been perfect. "It had certain drawbacks and disadvantages. In fact the way it has operayted has not been very successful either." The legislatioin had emphasized building up a family planning service but most of that had not occurred.

He would not allow his party a free vote in the Dail on the issue but added: "We will play a full part in the review and would hope we will be able to come up and agree, perhaps with the Government when they put forward their proposals, on what is the best thing to be done "

The Government is under pressure to bring changes with the debate focusing on whether non-medical contraceptives should be available on demand or if an age limit should be introduced.

Dr Garret FitzGerald, the Prime Minister, is to head a sub-committee of Fine Gael which will set out his party's position on reform that indicates division like that which occurred over the abortion amendment referedum.

The latest opinion poll on contraception in the republic showed 36 per cent in favour of their availability to everyone, 25 per cent to married people only, 22 per cent to married people only with prescriptions, 15 per cent not available at all and 2 per cent had no opinion.

Early book on plastic surgery makes £11,550

By Geraldine Norman Sale Room Correspondent

The first modern book on plastic surgery, Tagliacozzi's De Curtorum Chirurgia... pub-lished in Venice in 1597, was sold at Sotheby's yesterday for £11,550 (estimate £5,000-£6,000) to Thomas Scheler, a Paris dealer who specializes in medical books. Tagliacozzi was much opposed by the ecclesias-tical authorities of the time and after him plastic surgery was neglected until the nineteenth century.
In the same sale, one of the most beautiful illustrated scientific books of the Renaissance Vidius's Chirurgea e Graeco in Latinum Conversa published in Paris in 1544, secured £10,450 (estimate £4,000-£6,000). Sellafield leukaemia allegations supported Allegations that the high level of leukaemia in children living reprocessing plants is linked to radioactive contamination from the nuclear site is supported in an official report submitted to the Department of Health and Social Security.

The first full package for and schools on their teaching national agreement on what children should learn at school was outlined yesterday by $ir Keith Joseph, Secretary of State for Education and Science.

He announced that Government will issue a discussion document within the next few months aimed at setting national objectives for learning and designing an agreed curriculum for pupils aged between five and 16.

Alongside those proposals, School Inspectors will publish two papers describing the variety of curriculum in pri-mary and secondary school as the starting point for what will become a key national debate. The assumption held since the Second World War that schools can and should manage without an agreed formula for learning must be overturned. Sir Keith told the Council of Local Education Authorities' annual conference in Newcastle upon Tyne.

It had become "a recipe for misunderstanding and ill-directed endeavour," hamper-ing any judgment of whether school standards were rising or methods, but to set targest. Core subjects such as mathematics, science, English and modern languages could easily be agreed, bu the framework would eventually include specific objectives within those

It would also describe wha pupils should learn from subjects which cross the traditional boundaries, such as environment studies.

A key new ingredient is to set targets for primary schools, so that each pupil has objectives for attainment by the age of 11. Sir Keith said that primary schools he had visited were keen, zealous and devoted".

He dismissed the "fashion-able" idea that children should solely be taught how to learn, regardless of what knowledge they actually learnt. A mix of facts and skills was essential. Standards would be built from the bottom powards, the Minister told reporters later. Once targets were set the national curriculum could be devised, and examinations could be geared to test achievement of those objectives.

Sir Keith reaffirmed his assessment of teachers. "But I do not close my eyes to the fact that there are some who have become individually weak in professional terms or otherwise

Government spending on the National Health Service in the past five years has barely kept pace with increased demand, lespite ministers' claims that it has risen at 17 per cent above the rise in prices, the House of Commons social services committee said yesterday.

The all-party group of MPs says that on the Department of growth over the past five years, once the faster rate of NHS pay and price increases is allowed for, was only 7.2 per cent, not 17 per cent.

With the aging population demanding extra spending of about I per cent a year just to stand still, and medical advances needing another 0.5 per cent, the committee says "It is clear to us that ... expenditure on the hospital and community health services has barely succeeded in keeping pace with increased demand.

The committee is also highly critical of Government claims that NHS spending is growing by one per cent after last year's per cent cut in NHS spending "To cut I per cent in one year and restore it in the next year is not 'growth'", the committee says. In the past two years, the committee says, real growth after allowing for higher NHS prices and pay, has been dependent on efficiency savings, and the same looks to be true for the current year.

The committee urges a thorough review of the way expenses to family doctors' are controlled when the Government publishes its green paper on family practitioners' services

A total of £400m will be paid out in direct and indirect expenses this year, not much less than half the total pay bill

"In questioning officials we were not convinced that there was adequate control", the committee says. No limit is placed on what GPs can pay their ancillary staff, and doctors can reclaim rent and rates payments even if they have only nominal list of NHS patients.

On DHSS capital grants to children's homes, the committee says it is astonishing that more than £17,000 was spent re-tarmacing a Roman Catholic children's home in Leeds in 1982-83 when the home closed the following year.

An early draft of the amnesty Bill seen by the Roman Catholic Church, provides forfreedom for all political prisoners, including the seven jailed Solidarity leaders and the four members of the KOR workers self defence committee wich helped and advised the union. This draft also offers an amnesty to underground acti-vists who surrender before the end of December and make a

The four KOR members Mr Jacek Kuron, Mr Adam Michulk, Mr Henryk Wujec and Mr Zbigniew Roamszewski - are currently on trial, under articles 123 and 128 of the penal code, accused of preparing to overthrow the state by force.

United States officials say privately that if Mr Lech Walesa, the Solidarity leader. and the Pope give their approval to the amnesty the way will be politically clear to dismantle sanctions.

Sanctions include the restriction of Polish landing rights in America, the suspension of most favoured nation status in its trade relations with Washington, a freeze on top level Nato visits to the country and the withholding of slabs of Government aid to Poland.

The cold climate has also slowed down Poland's entry into the International Monetary Fund and talks between the Western creditor governments, the Club of Paris, and the Polish Finance Ministry.

To compensate for the losses officially calculted at about $12bn (£9bn) by the Poles caused by sanctions, the Soviet block has intensified a assistance to Poland. A mark of the close relations enjoyed between the Jaruzelski and Chemenko leaderships came yesterday with the arrival of the Soviet Premier, Mr Nikolai Tikhonov, at the head of a party-state delegation.

New twist in cell death case

From Michael Horosby

Mr Jack Tseko, a black man, ppeared in court in Parys. in the Orange Free State, yesterday charged with the murder of Mr Johannes Ngalo, another black, who was found dead in a cell in the local police station last Despite this latest develop ment lawyers for Mr Ngalo's family said they were proceed ing with a civil claim against the police. The family disputes the police version of events leading to Mr Ngalo's death, which has been repeatedly changed.

An independent post mortem examination, performed yesterconfirmed the earlier finding of a state pathologist that Mr Ngalo suffered multiple injuries before his death.

The police said at first that Mr Ngalo had been picked up in Parys last Sunday in a drunken state, put in a cell overnight and found dead the next morning. One of the other detainees claimed to have seen Mr Ngalo being knocked about by the police. The police then alleged that shortly before his arrest Mr Ngalo had tried to rob a cafe, and had been kicked when the black owner defended himself Now comes the additional claim that earlier still Mr Ngalo had been involved in a fight with Mr Tseko, a lodger in his house. The family concede that the two men quarrelled but insist there was no physical violence between them.

Meanwhile two petrol bombs exploded in Lenasia, the Indian township outside Johannesburg early yesterday, and a third in the nearby Coloured area of Eldorado Park.

Refugees come home to a more hopeful future From Susan MacDonald, Dakar

The new military regime in the West African state of Guinea has gone to great lengths to create an atmosphere of tranquility and confidence, fulfilling the promises it made when it took power in a coup on April 3. Guineans appear to be losing their sense of oppression and fear, and there is an air of relaxed openness. One effect is that some of the two million refugees are beginning to return. A request for help with reabsorbing them brought a study team from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees at the beginning of this month, to assess the problems created by a steady flow of refugees back into a country which is potentially one of the richest in Africa, But devastated by 26 years of the late President Sekou Toure's dictatorship.

Reports in the British press stated that the breaking point was the refusal of the Government to say that it was not "yet" prepared to discuss the issue of sovereignty. The word "yet" was the breaking point. Will he recall (he asked), that it is unwise to use the word "never" in matters of this nature? Would it not be much wiser to

We have made it clear that we are not prepared to discuss sovereignty. However regrettable from many points of views, the Argentines have to live with the consequence of the fact that it was they who used force and invaded at a time when we where negotiating on that very question in all good faith. Sir Groffrey Howe There is no Sir Geoffrey Howe: There is no question of rigidity or intransigence on this matter. vations are totally invalid. The question of sovereignty or questions of that kind were deliberately and carefully put to one side in the formula we designed. Discussions came to an end because of the failure of the Argentine to follow the agreed formula. Mr Healey: Is he really saying this morning that Britain will never consider the problem of sovereignty with the democratic government in

Israel threatens to cut off southern Lebanon in row over 'liaison' office

From Robert Fisk Beirut

In apparent retaliation for the Lebanese Government's decision to close the Isreali "liaison" office north of Beirut, Israeli officials in Lebanon are now threatening to prevent Lebanese civilians from travelling to southern Lebanon by refusing to issue permits that allow them to cross the Israeli front line.

For almost a year, the Israeli authorities have insisted that anyone crossing the Awali or Bisri rivers into the south of Lebanon should obtain a pass written in Hebrew and issued at the "liaison" office at Dbaye, 12 miles outside the capital - even though such permits have no validity in Lebanese law.

The bureau, a two-storey villa :- above the Mediterranean which had hitherto been guarded by Lebanese Government troops, was ordered to close by the Lebanese Cabinet two days ago.

In an apparent reference to the three armed Israeli security men from the office who were captured by the Syrians while, on their own admission, on a reconnaissance trip more than two months ago, Mr Adel Oseiran, the Lebanese Defence Minister, rudely referred to the office as "an espionage centre" - even though it was legally set up under the terms of the Lebanese-Israeli troop with-

Lebanese wishing to visit relatives or do business in Sidon and Tyre have experienced growing delays in acquiring Israeli permits in recent weeks. During the past month, foreign correspondents based in Beirut have also been forced to wait two or three days to obtain written passes to go south,

Ironically, and despite Israel's claim that it is Syria which wishes to partition Lebanon, it still takes only two or three minutes to cross the Syrian front lines in the mountains east and north of Bearut. The Syrian Army requires no form of pass to travel into its area of occupation -Syrian soldiers ask only for identity cards or passports -and there are none of the 24-hour delays which thousands of Lebanese now have to endur on the road south.

An official spokesman at the Israeli office at Dhaye, who-identified himself only as "Robert", said yesterday: "We are not issuing permits any more. No further comment."

Sandinistas extend emergency

Managua
The Sandinista Government has extended the state of emergency in Nicaragua restricting certain civil liberties for almost the whole of the forthcoming election campaign. With less than three weeks to go before the campaign begins, the left-wing junta had been expected to suspend the emergency law during celebrations on Thursday to mark the fifth anniversary of the Sandinista revolution. Instead the law has been extended for three months, and will expire only two weeks before voting on November 4. The decision increases the likelihood that centre and rightwing opposition parties will boycott the elections. Señor Luis Rivas Leiva, president of the Democratic Coordinating Committee, said: "This narrows the possibility that democratic sectors in Nicaragua can participate. "And let it be seen that the opposition parties are not to lame if there is no taking part

However, parties have not to declare their with drawal from the elections. The Government did make some concession by revoking clauses banning public meetings and demonstrations. The coordinator of the Administration Comandante Daniel Ortega, addressing 150,000 supporters in Managua's Heroes and Marty's Square on the anniver-sary, declared: "Much is said about the state of emergency. The hypocrites clamour for the Government to suspend it when we all know that it is the North American Government with its terrorist policies that has imposed a state of national mergency on Nicaragua. "Is it not an emergency to have to mobilize thousands of students and workers to the battlefields, to have to apply extra ordinary measures guarantee food supply and production?" he said.

At the age of 60, Weizman, who once courted his wife by dropping red roses on to her tennis court from the cockpit of his Sptifire, has brought colour to an otherwise dull campaign and also some fresh ideas.

Because new parties only get 10 minutes television advertis-ing time, compared with about 300 each for the two main political groups, Mr Weizman has established his presence the hard way, crisscrossing Israel for scores of meetings designed to support Yahad's slogan: "I believe in Weizman.

Long wait by Greek islanders for redress

After the letter from Mr Michael Huag detailing alle-gations by the islanders of Kastellarizo in the Dodecanese, Mario Modiano reports from the island on grievances against the British.

By awarding Greece compen-sation worth 10 million drach-mas (about £56,000), Britain has acknowledged the looting of the island Kastellorizo by Birtish troops who occupied it after Italy's capitulation in 1943, in what seems to be an embarrassing and unrecorded incident of the Second World

EEC Foreign Ministers will have to return on Monday to a subject they hoped to have been rid of for some time to come the European budget. Britain will once more be in the dock, when the ministers meet in Brussels, for refusing to allow the Community the extra money it is claimed must be found if all this year's bills are to be met.

After nearly 24 hours of argument n Brussels, the budget ministers failed early yesterday to come to any conclusion about how to find the extra

The failure was largely because Mr Ian Stewart, the British Minister, insisted that there was no legal basis for aising any of the extra £1,240m which the commission said it needed. He said that only national parliaments had the right to agree such an increase in spending and refused to be moved by the "special case" pleas of poverty for this year.

Mr Jim O'Keefe, the Irish Minister chairing the meeting suggested that there would at least be a shortfall this year of pounds £810m. But there was no general support for this compromise. Denmark wanted more, Holland and West Germany thought the amount should be less. France wanted savings but could not say how much, pending the views of its new Government. Britain insisted there was no need to find anything extra and was greatly helped in holding a firm line by the indecision of the others.

The argument over extra money for this year spilled over into discussions on next year's budget. Traditionally the Budget Council draws up a draft at risk. This is meant to take budget for the following year at form of reduced contribution this time. But the situation has proposals put forward by the West in April. Since 1976 there has been agreement in principle that both sides should reduce their forces to 900,000, not more than 700,000 being ground forces. There has been no agreement however, on the number actually in place at present; the discrepancy between the two been complicated because the Commission wants the member states to spend more in 1985 than can be legally raised.

The Fontaineblean sum agreed to ask national parliaments to raise the level of Community income from the start of 1986. The commission argues, therefore that there should be enough political goodwell available for member tates to pay some of this extra money in advance to cover overspending this year and

Given Britain's categoric refusal to pay more than it has to, the Conneil could do no more than discuss a conditional draft budget for next year inside the legal limit. This, in effect meant lopping a total of about £1,150m off the ommission's proposed budget. There was a connacts at the council that two thirds of this should be taken away from the.£10,800 which is meant to be paid for agriculture

If there is no agreement for Extra money this year, traders and national governments will have to pay the bills and then reclaim the cash from the Community next year. Farmers are not likely to suffer immedi-

But the mere fact of pushing the bills over into next year will mean that the 1985 budget will have to be reduced even more to make ends meet. Farmers can expect no increases for the second year running. Surplus stocks will continue to build up expensively because no money will be available to unload and grief in Cyprus From Zoriana Pyzariwsky Nicosia

The conflicting passions and interests that are Cyprus were illuminated to the full yesterday, as both Greek Gypriots and Turkish Cypriots marked the tenth anniversary of the Turkish invasion in differing forms, and one side's victory celebration became for the other ebration became for the other side a travesty. In the northern sector of the divided island, Turkish Cypriots commemorated the "peace operation" of 1974 with a military parade attended by Mr Nuretin Ersin, the Turkish eneral who commanded the first landing of troops in Cyprus four days after the military Junts in Greece staged an unsuccessful coup attempt against the late Cypciot presi-dent, Archbishop Makarios.

Claiming that Greece had violated the treaty of guarantee, Turkey launched an operation ostensibly to protect the Turkish Cypriot minority on the island Across the "green line"

Greek Cypriots gathered out side the Venetian walls that surround Nicosia's old, city for demonstrations to mourn an event that effectivly partitioned the island, Banners and posters in Nicosia bemoaned the plight of more than 1,600 missing persons and 200,000 Greek Cypriot refugees.

The contradictory emotions and interpretations of recent Cypriot history made clear why compromise has been a difficul idea to embrace.

Nevertheless, 10 years of limbo bave left a longing for certainty, and the next attemp to achieve this will be made next month when Senor Javier Pérez de Cuéllar, Secretary-General of the United Nations will meet high level representatives of both communities

Patriotism is the last refuge - but my friend Mr Boswell has expounded the Conclusion. I have eld it a Maxim that a decent provision for the Poor is the true test of Civilization. Liberty is, to the lowest rank of every Nation, little more than the Choice of working or starving; and where the Young stand idle, and the Labourer receives neither Hope nor Hire, what Praise can Statesmanship expect, or Stew-ardship demand? Where is the Junius who shall arouse the Nation, or the Burke who shall unite it?

The Proceedings of the present Government, remarkable alike for their Economy and their Cruelty. may strangely recall the Arguments of Soame Jenyns in his Free Enquiry into the Nature and Origins of Evil. He was of the Opinion that there is some inconceivable Benefit in Pain abstractedly considered; that Pain however inflicted or wherever felt, communicates some Good to the General System of being, and that every Citizen is some way or other the Better for the Pain of every other Citizen. They grow lean upon it, and wax Competitive like Rats in an Empty Barn. Though Industry may appland. Humanity must wring its Hands. Let every Member who can withstand the Whips of Faction and the Scorn of debit, see Britannia abroad, become Ceres at home.

But the truly Democratick Leaders of the people in this Age are those who Command without Consultation, form a Mob without a Mandate, and break a Union vithout a Ballot. It is the Apotheosis of Insubordination, by which Law is insulted, and Loyalty betrayed. When I dined once with Jack Wilkes, that democrat in lace, I philosophically observed: "Sure, Sir, you don't think a Resolution of the House of Commons equal to the Law of the Land? "God forbid, Sir," he complaisantly replied. Yet they who complain, in peace, of the insolence of the Populace, must remember, that their insolence in peace is Bravery in War. Let them not bring the Falklands to the

You have bade me further. Sir. speak of Books; and in truth the chief Glory of every People arises from its Authors. Yet no place affords a more striking Conviction of the Vanity of Human Hopes than a Public Library. When forty-thousand Volumes are flung from the Presses each Year, what are nine-tenths of these but illiterate Stratagems by which Pride endeavours to recommend Folly to Regard? But the common Adage holds, for the Pen is mightier than the Sword, and though we lose an Empire from our Arms, we embrace again a World

The Comic Writers of the present time, as befits an Age of Brass, dance forth like the Imps of our Destiny. But the Poet retreats, haunted by domestic Melancholy, or bloated by academick foggage. The Critic Opposition I have succinctly defined makes Dullness a general Virtue, lenorance produces; as to him: that should extinguish the Taners of a Lighthouse, might justly be imputed the Calamities of Shipwrecks. Our Universities are strewn with their Flotsam, and our Labour Exchanges with their Jetsam. The Literary Journals, it is true, still show their Ironic points of Luminescence and Addison's Wit still shines; but for the most it is burning a Farthing Candle at Dover, to show a Light at Calais. Our modish Fictions are Nasty, Bratish, and Short. The Moral Understanding of the Human heart, that is the Soul of Criticism and the principle of Immortality, lives chiefly in the Biographical part of our Literature, which is what I No other Portent has so commanded the Eyes of Attention, the Features of the Guardian, or the Pockets of the Bookseller, as the Female Author. She is the Oracle and the Accuser of the Age; its Cassandra and its Virago. I have said of a Woman's preaching that it is like a Dog's walking on its Hinder legs: it is not done well, but you are Surprised to find it done at all. But Woman who will leave her Pulpit for her Pen, and her Sermons for her Study, will very often be found to have a Bottom of good Sense. She takes to her page like a Duck to water, and you are rather Surprised that she ever returns to the Dry shores of Domesticity. She has proved more Booyant in this medium than any other Art, her Loquacity matched frequently by her Learning, and her Sincerity by her Style. The essence of her Genius is Autobiographical, and the best she writes in Poetry or Fictions has the candid ring of a Testament on Oath. Who among us has so well displayed the causes of Connubial Infelicity, or the consequences of social Op-pression? Yet let her emulate if she can, my lovely friend Mrs. Carter, who could make a pudding as well as translate Epictetus.

You will think, Sir, that I am too Gallant on such matters. But an assurance of Unfading Laurels and Immortal Reputation is the settled reciprocation of Civility between micable Writers. Indeed I find I have fallen into your Scheme of cumbrous Levity throughout, though I am too Tardy to retract, and too Dilatory to amend. Let the Pious reader alone reflect, that whatever the Benefits or the Barbarisms of the Present Age, they must be judged against the Past; for all Judgment is comparative, and of the Future much may be Hoped but nothing can be Known. The truths of the Human heart are perennial; they have a constant Anniversary, like Amaranthine flowers. It is these that we celebrate in our Authors, and for these that they hope to be Honoured: not as Monuments, but as Men. Therefore, toss away this Paper, turn to my Books, and have out your Talk. Post Scriptum, Pray Sir. do not, entirely disregard, however, the Scotch and erroneous Opinion of my friend Mr Boswell, that no Man but a Blockhead ever wrote except for Money.

Why Marchais could return

The past month has witnessed a period of political turbulence certain to leave an indelible mark on French history, though in what form is as Eyes are firmly fixed on the 1986 parliamentary elections. The Socialists, now on their own and with only 21 per cent of electoral support, if the European elections are to be believed, will have to find some magical formula if they are to ment and Piere Joxe, has again confounded the commentators. The month of drama began with the June 17 European elections, when the Communist vote fell to its lowest level in 50 years. At the same time, the extreme right staged a spectacular breakthrough, the National Front obtaining 11 per cent of the vote, the same as the A week later, in the country's

With the opposition getting the upper hand, Mitterrand had to make a speciacular gesture to capture the imagination of the electorate and put the government back on the offensive. It came on July 12, the official visit to Jordan, when he announced on television that he was to call a referendum - not on private schools, which he would almost certainly have lost, but on his proposal to extend the use of referenda to cover questions of fundamental civil liberties. It was totally unexpected and seen as a brilliant political coup.

The opposition had long advocated an extension of the use of the referendum and looked as if it would be compelled to support the proposal, even though it would help restore the left's traditional image as the defender of civil liberties, which the right seemed to have stolen from

But the opposition seized uponthe implied extension of presidential powers in Mitterrand's proposal and began a "vote no" campaign. The Communists and even some Socialists expressed disquiet.

On Tuesday, less than a week after Mitterrand's referendum announcement, Alain Savary, the minister responsible for the disavowed private schools bill, decided to resign. Pierre Mauroy, the prime minister, who had supported Savary on the bill and who knew that his days were anyway numbered, seems to have felt, without rancour, that from everyone's point of view there should be a complete change of Within hours of the announce ment of M Savary's resignation, the country was amazed to hear that the 37-year-old Fabius had replaced Mauroy as prime minister.

Georges Marchais, the Communist leader, immediately flew back from a holiday in Romania for an emergency meeting of the politbu-reau. Talks were held with Fabius. who offered the Communists four new posts in his government, but not the assurances they were seeking on a change of economic policy. After an all-night meeting, the party's central committee an-nounced that the Communists had decided to leave the government.

The divorce had seemed likely since the government introduced its policy of economic rigour in March 1983. But it still took a lot of agonized heart-searching before the final decision was taken. Many Communists remember how cold it can be outside. But the hypocrisy of the Communists' position of "par-ticipation without support" had become too blatant. Communist voters wanted something more honest

Nevertheless the door has been left ajar for a possible eventual return. The Communists have said the would consider it if the conditions were right. In the meantime, they will support those measures which they approve probably, in the present political climate, very few - and their departure will almost certainly mean increased trouble on the industrial front from the Communist-led-CGT union group.

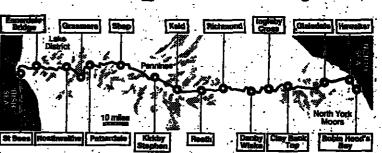

The government is in for a rough ride over the next two years. The economy is just beginning to show signs of recovery, but the industrial modernization programmes are starting to take their toll in compulsory redundancies and unemployment is rising fast. Mitter rand is unlikely to survive beyond 1986 without a reconsecration of the

Backtracking, the backpack way

If you have a spare formight and a stout pair of boots, head for St Bees on the Cumbrian coast and go east, in the steps of the redoubtable Alfred Wainwright, until you hit the North Sea. When at length you trundle down into the crowded clique of houses at Robin Hood's Bay, six miles south of Whitby, you will have strode 190 glorious miles along Britain's most scenic but least-

For this is the collarbone of England, traversing the long and frequently boring Pennine breastplate, and yoked across the island's right and left shoulders of the Lake District and North Yorkshire.

It has everything that a walker may ask of a walk, including that most prized commodity of relative obscurity. Yet I am unapologetic in writing about it for I know that Mr Wainwright, our most determined proselytizer of the far fell and its footways, will forgive me - as will his growing infantry of ensuers.

Almost all of the marathon paths which have been established in the footsteps of the Pennine Way have had the official sanction of the Countryside Commission - Offa's Dyke, South West Peninsula, Ridgeway, North Downs, South Downs and so on. Wainwright and his book, therefore, both as anti-dirigiste as it is possible for guides to be, carry the promise of improvization and even, within the constraints of the by-laws, the prospect of some modest pioneering.

It was in 1972 that Wainwright finally got around to doing the walk The result, as with all his other wanderings, was a book of painstak-ing exactinude and sudden droleries. Now, at the age of 77, he has more than 40 titles to his credit, printed by the publishers of his local paper The Westmorland Gazette, from photos of his own handwritten manuscripts.

On each page are his famous line-drawings of the crags, vistas and man-made landmarks along the route, together with his own sectionmaps of the path, which all but take the walker by the liand, mile after mile, stile after stile. These are the individual stitches which slowly thread you across the North's broad and rumpled quilt.

As Adam Nicolson explains in his book, Long Walks, Wainwright's route is the best as it runs against England's grain: "It seems to realign the country, as if the island had been tipped on its side, like Crete or Java ... the whole thing is seen as if from space, as a journey across a mental

Moreover, the path traverses

District, Yorkshire Dales and North York Moors - and only once succumbs seriously to the tarmac, over the broad and boring cereal tray of Mowbray between the Pennines and the Cleveland Hills. "Left right, left right," scribbles Wainwright, as if to pre-empt your impatience.

Along the route I met many walkers who, with the little volume in hand, agreed it was the next best thing they could imagine to travel-ling with Wainwright in person. Not just because he writes: "100 miles, yippeel" when you pass the Old Gang Mines to the west of Reeth, but because he keeps you - literally and tersely - in the picture, as the landscape advances and retires with that peculiarly English suddeness. He might be explaining the natural features, or all the various evidence of man's activity now laid low - the splatter of mining spoil above Surrender Bridge, the grassy loops of defunct railway around Rosedale, or the flooded village of Mardale. The walkers knew they would have to content themselves with the Wainwright-substitute, for the man himself is famously private. often happier in the company of his fells than of his fellows.

Here - from the southern fastness of an office block 250 miles away - I confess to a piece of hubris the height of Helvellyn. You did the walk the wrong way, Mr Wainwright - sir. You should have gone west. I know that your route means we get the weather at our backs and not on our faces, I know that Cumbria's peaks are hard-won by weary legs and thus better for starters. The trouble is that the Lakes are untrumpable; in the scenic sense the eastward passage is downhill all the way. The unpeopled sweep of Northeast Yorkshire's heather moors is a fine enough proposition, but for a walker who just a week previously was all but airborne on Striding Edge, gliding down to Patterdale, there is an element of anti-climax.

To invert the Wainwright route of course, I had at times to do likewise with his book so that his maps would point the right way. I also had to read the sentences in reverse order. I must have looked an absurd sight, particularly in the small intricacies of Mowbay's byways squinting at an upside-down hardback at every crossroad. But I am ninrepentant; whether you are with or against Wainwright, the verb which should be dedicated to him (to coast-to-coast) offers a grand prospect, whatever way you read over with swashes and curlicues, flowers and leaves, it has as supporters a pair of sylvan lovers, in the bottom right-hand corner there is a dog. It is full of energy doomed to sputter out but immensly exhilarating while it lasts; it makes clear why "Rococo" was originally a term of ridicule; executed in silver, and not too large, it would go nicely on the mantelpiece but would need a devil of a lot of dusting.

If you are still lost, look at item N26, illustrated on page 210, it is a design for a printed textile; the design is called simply "Birds", but it is no use trying to count the number of birds in it, because you will get a different answer each time. Meanwhile, however, the print positively quivers as you look at it, its exuberance so bold and confident that it triumphs at once over its own absurdity and becomes positively touching there is no indication in the catalogue note of what use the textile might have been put to, but if it was a dress, the wearer would have to be quite extraordinarily fat. What is surprising, at any rate to my eye, is the vast range of subjects infected by this style, far wider, I think, than could be said of the Baroque (see "Rococo"). catalogue has separate sections (though of course they are not thus separated in the exhibition) for Prints, Silver, Gold. Objets de Vertue, Arms and Armour, Base Metal. and design beneath the foliage. The Hogarthian reference in the exhibition's sub-title is no tease; though I do not believe many people taking an association test would say when prompted with "Rococo" (or vice versa) it was he who most encouraged the style to find roots in England and to spread, and he has an entire section devoted to him, including his bust, and for that matter his dog, by Roubiliac. (There are heaps of Roubiliacs here, (There are heaps of Kommunes mere, including Pope, Swift, the abominable Bentley, and Handel; I don't think Roubliac a patch on Hondon, but some of these busts, particularly the Hogarth, are full of life).

youth - has only just been supplanted by the new version in two huge, comprehensive and handsome volumes edited by Denis Arnold) would have no truck with such fancy foreign gibberish; he says crisply of Rococo that "In ordinary English usage this means tastelessly florid, or something of that kind, and under Baroque tells us even more crisply that "Burney... gives its equivalents as coarse uncouth'," though he does have the grace to add "This sense is now discarded". But styles so pervasive as these cannot possibly have failed to penetrate music as well, and certainly music chosen for this exhibition (I can find no reference to it in the catalogue) seems to fit well. Nobody would call the V & either Baroque or Rococo (though) cannot for the life of me imagine what it should be called); on the other hand, the only difficulty with its Director is deciding whether he is Late Baroque or Early Rococo (some say he is Gothic Revival, but I do not find the arguments for this theory convincing). He has been making gloomy noises for some time about this being the last really comprehensive exhibition the V & A will be able to afford, but I don't believe it, and don't even believe I am supposed to. But, if it is, it will make a magnificent finale, on which he and all his staff and contributors are to be heartily congratulated; the exhibition, which continues until the end of September, is full of life, wit beauty and exuberance; I cannot imagine a couple of hours better

This is no. evidence of failure on the committee's part, and perhaps the remarkable thing is that the area of dissent was as small as it is. For this reason the Government is right not to be falling over itself in haste to legislate in general on Warnock's rec-ommendations. Perhaps unprecedentedly, the report itself warns against too early implementation. Public opinion is still feeling its way towards a consensus, and it needs to go further before an attempt should be made to fix it in statute. One of the most important functions of the report, which is clear and easy to read, should be to create a fuller knowledge of the possi-bilities and dispel some anxieties based on fantasy. But society will never agree completely, any more than the committee could, and the law as it stands simply fails to envisage many of the situations that science has now made possible. Legislation will be needed before too long, and the recommendations of the majority: Warnock report are likely to represent the best summary of what will prove acceptable.

The deepest question which divided the committee was over experiments on embryos. Given that it is now possible to fertilise. store and implant embryos. iome of which will be surplus to

One minority on the committee broke away at this point, effectively rejecting much of the preliminary work these techniques are based on.

If that is acceptable, then is it right to bring embryos into being specifically for research? Another minority broke away here. Somewhere further down the line, most of the rest of us will feel that it is wrong to exploit the follow. There is no logic to settle these disagreements definitively. Even the moment of fertilization, the strongest contender as the starting-point for the individual, produces an entity which may still develop into one individual or several. Balancing the general good against the reverence due to the potential for human growth, the majority favoured a fourteen-day limit. based on the first signs of structural development. This appears satisfactory: the limit should certainly come before appearance of a rudimentary nervous system at about six-

The committee's most important recommendation is for a permanent body to monitor and licence procedures and to advise the Government on developments. In a field of rapid change, this would reassure the public that no sanctioned Frankensteins are brewing horrors in their laboratories, and it would respond to changes in public opinion in a way that statute could not. It should be given the widest discretion to advise on changes in the law, and its membership should be such as to ensure that it cannot fall into the hands either of insatiable researchers or of opponents prepared to paralyse the system because it offends their own weeks after fertilization.

Public opinion does change, faster than it is sometimes given credit for. Custom can sometimes easily make it used to what seemed unacceptable only a few years before. It is difficult to say in retrospect whether the sharp changes in received opinion about AID and abortion over the years showed that the pundits were out of touch with underlying feelings, or that familiarity can make some people used to almost anything probably a bit of both. But in the light of our current ethical perceptions it is right to seek to inhibit trends that may shift opinion in directions which seem undesirunborn human individual, able. One case of that kind however great a good may provides the only instance where able. One case of that kind quick legislation on Warnock proposal might be worthwhile.

There is a real risk that surrogate motherhood arranged through organised agencies may be on the edge of rapid growth in Britain. Sympathy for the plight of childless couples might make the development seem tolerable. The practice is in some forms something that people can and will do whether it is legal or not, and it would be wrong to punish or obstruct medical care to those directly involved. But as an organised transaction it should be discouraged, because of the insecurity of the child's position, because the hiring of sexual services of any kind is repugnant, and because the practice is likely to grow if people have a financial interest in promoting it. Even on an ostensibly non-profit basis, the sanction of respectability would be an encouragement. Certainly surrogacy contracts should be made unenforceable and all disputes settled in relation to the interests of the child. There will be some hard cases if many doctors with opinions like those of Mr Robert Winston in the case reported this week proved ready to defy a new criminal law. But as public opinion stands at present, there is a strong case for legislation to rule out such aid, dangerous in its consequences however kind its motives.

THE DEMOCRATS' DECISION

well as light relief for the allies: the United States. The first characterizations are selflent. Mr Mondale will make rong contender whatever the fits say about his chances of ienting an incumbent presithe addition of Mrs Ferraro ion makes the ticket for still. At their conventhe Democrats displayed again the amazing syn-1 of American party politics, that instinctive reaching out to embrace the most disparate elements under a single broad banner. For the interest of the Western Alliance, we have to look beneath the convention's rhetoric to the steady rejection, thanks to the Mondale machine, of all but the vaguest commitments on foreign policy. Mr Mondale enters the lists unencumbered by any dangerous promises on the use of nuclear weapons or the deployment of armed forces overseas; the worryingly isolationist voice of Mr Hart has been temporarily silenced. Except on the issue of defence expenditure itself, Mr Mondale is separated from the President much more by style than substance. He certainly would not come to high office in November with the reflexes of Mr Carter, perhaps that link with Hubert Humphrey and the

> to win? The spectral appearance in San Francisco of Mr Carter was a reminder less of the former president's failures in office (with which Mr Mondale must be tainted) than of the Democrats' lack of a southern strategy beyond the mobilization of the Black vote. The Democratic Cassandras point knowingly to Mr Mondale's startling weakness in such pivotal states as Texas; defeat there would crystallize the shift of economic power and population to the Sunbelt and would have important consequences for the shape of the Democratic coalition to be put together in 1988. Votes in the electoral college will reflect not only geography but also the Democrats' continuing association with what the Americans graphically call Big Government. The tide of popular sentiment which swept the United States (and washed these shores too) in the later 1970s against the expense and intrusiveness of government has by no means completed its course. The very lack of dramatic change during the Reagan years reinforces the misgivings many Americans still feel about the scale of federal government.

de`_ the big cities, the trade unions demand federal programmes and government intervention of one kind or another. Mr Mondale would come to Washington in the autumn pledged to Big Government, and to the taxation to pay for it.

It is a mark of President Reagan's political skill that he can both be a part of the establishment and yet retain a distance from it; he will undoubtedly run in the autumn against Big Government while conveniently ignoring the inconsistent record of his own administration on federal spending and bureaucratic regulation. He will seek to unify Americans against Washington. The essence of the New Deal, the tenets of which Mr Mondale still holds dear was that central government would bind Americans together. Yet the promises Mr Mondale made to get to San Francisco and the domestic commitments he has made there leave him with neither of these positions. His pledges on spending (with accompanying taxes), on affirmative action (discrimi nation at government behest) and protective tariffs suggest the Democrats enter the election intent on using government in such a way that it is bound to divide Americans.

Gibraltar heritage

From the Minister for Economic Development, and Trade in Gibrattar Sir, We are grateful to Brigadier Hamilton-Baillie (July 11) for drawing attention to the problems which face the Gibraltar Government in our attempts to reconcile our very genuine wish to preserve as toany of the fortifications of Gibraltar which, as he says, are of world stature, with the responsibility which we must fulfil to reorientate and develop Gibraltar's economy in the wake of the closure of the naval dockyard and of the severe economic imbalance which the partial and discriminatory opening of the frontier by the Spanish authorities have brought upon us. (Even British tourists and residents in Spain may not enter the British territory of Gibraltari.

The brigadier is perfectly correct in saying that tourism is important to us and that the old town and its defences are a major attraction (although we have others). On the first point, the Gibraltar Govern-ment have recently taken firm and determined decisions to develop the tourist industry; on the second point, one of the steps we have taken is to appoint a mixed official/private sector History and Heritage Committee to advise the Government on the way in which our heritage (including our natural heritage) can be preserved, both for its own sake and for the attraction which it represents to many people in Britain and elsewhere.

The Gibraltar Conservation Society, as well as the Gibraltar Natural History and Ornithological Society, are represented, among others, on this committee. It is the ntention of our Department of Tourism to apply for membership of the Fortress Study Group.

Your readers may be interested to know that plans are being prepared for a two-part Gibrahar Reringe Conference to be held, here and in London, probably in February (anyone interested should contact Mr S. Alper, Chilford Hall, Linton, Cambridge a non-resident member of our History and Heritage Committee).

We share the brigadier's wish that "a better solution to the difficult car parking problem in Gibraltar may be found". But how and where - in 214 crowded square miles of a territory struggling to achieve economic self-sufficiently against great odds and external pressures? The dilemma therefore remain how to reconcile the profound appeal of our heritage with the economic necessities forced upon us by decisions taken in London (on the naval dockyard) and in Madrid (on the partial opening of the frontier). We will do our best to resolve it, with the help of our heritage committee and the heritage conference. Yours faithfily, A. J. CANEPA

Child benefit proposal

From Mr John Wilson Sir, In the generous coverage give to the new report by the Institute for Fiscal Studies on the Reform of Social Security (report and leading article, July 12) one important point has escaped comment. The report's proposals would entail the replacement of child benefit, which goes normally to the mother, by a child benefit credit which would be paid through the pay-packet where it was paid at all. The effect is therefore a major redistribution of income from women to men. But perhaps this will not be seen as a dowback by those who believe in the "ethic of labour and masculine responsibility" (leading article, July 3). Yours faithfully. JOHN WILSON, 59a Dukes Avenue

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

New bishops and canon law

From the Reverend J. D. Brown Sir, Mr Enoch Powell may extol royal supremacy in the Church of England (report, July 18), but it is difficult to see how the Appointment of Bishops Measure would have seriously affected that already much-depleted supremacy.

It would, however, abolish the absurd anachironism of a dean and chapter being required both to elect a bishop and choose only the Crown's nomination or face the threat of dire punishment felt ary in more primitive medieval times.

The need to reform the system of piscopal appointments merits more constructive consideration to ensure that funire bishops will be guaran-teed to obey the requirement laid down by canon law "to uphold sound and wholesome doctrine and to banish and drive away all erroneous and strange opinions", Confidence in the Crown Ap-pointments Commission has been eroded by the controversial appoint-ment of the new Bishop of Durham, yet the authority of the Crown may still be seen as crucial in keeping the national Church true to its vocation of safeguarding and proclaiming the fundamental truths of the Christian faith to all our people. Yours faithfully,

J. D. BROWN Westhampnett Vicarage, Chichester, July 19.

From the Bishop of Peterborough Sir, I am glad that the House of Commons has refused to approve the Appointment of Bishops Mea-sure, and for the reasons which you report (July 18) that Mr Enoch Powell gave – I hope the General Synod will think again, or rather think. So far its persistent determination to demolish, little by remorseless little, the traditions, dignity and duties of the Church of England illuminates Dr Johnson's aphorism that that which is not formed by reason cannot be destroyed by reason. I left the General Synod at York last week with a sense of relief and thankfulness that never in my life shall I have to attend a synod again: and this was some comfort to my sadness concerning my imminent

The Synod suffers from that conceit which corrupts conscience. Some of its members imagine that the Synod owns the dioceses and parishes of England; that it can meddle with and mutilate the claims that the Church of England has always made that it holds the essentials of Catholic faith, tradition and order, that it can contain within. its own strangulated sentiments the whole counsel of God. It feeds itself, like a parasite, upon

From Mr W. Stephenson

Sir, I write as the stepson of Alister Watson, who has been publicly accused of being a Soviet spy in Monday's Granada World in Action television programme by an MIS agent, Mr Peter Wright.

I wish to protest most strongly at the public pillorying of my stepfather who, having recently died, is in no position to refute these untrue and unjust accusations. Anybody who knew my stepfather, as I did for over 30 years, will understand how ridiculous these allegations are. There is the real world and the fantasy world of certain disaffected members of MI5. A lot has been said recently about the need for security and confidentiality in Government and, for example, at GCHQ. Yet over the last 10 years we have been treated to an unprecedented number of leaks to the press about the affairs of MI5, which ought surely to be the most secure of Government agencies. What action has been taken over the people responsible for these breaches of confidentiality and of secrecy? And will Mrs Thatcher, as the minister with direct responsi-bility for the secret service, see that justice is done to people who, being dead, are unable to defend themselves or have recourse to the laws of

Fire at York Minster

From Mr Anthony Massey Sir, Miss Manley and Miss Eyton are surely wrong to suggest (July 17) that the Government should not help finance the restoration of York

I visited the minster today. Inside. the strong smell of woodsmoke still hanes in the air. The huge calm which the building still possesses is disturbed by the sound of hammering, as work on the south transent gathers momentum.

Giving money to help has nothing to do with salving consciences. To assist in the restoration of this graceful and inspiring building which has borne witness to Christian love and faith for centuries, is a very proper course for governments and individuals. Yours faithfully.

ANTHONY MASSEY, 20 Orchard Rise, Groombridge, moomorage, unbridge Wells.

Bail conditions for striking miners

From Mr Michael D. Varcoe-Cocks Sir. In a letter (July 19) which is clearly in support of striking miners rather than in condemnation of an alleged general practice by the Nottinghamshire magistrates Lord Gifford, QC, and others subtly paraphrase the provisions of the Bail Act and make no reference to other provisions which protect those they upport and/or represent.

The Bail Act provides that the court may require an accused to comply with such requirements as appear to the court to be necessary to secure that he surrenders to custody, does not commit an offence on bail, does not interfere with witnesses etc. This is not the same as Lord Gifford's statement that the imposition of conditions is appropriate only if it is believed that the person would fail to surrender to custody etc. Lord Gifford makes no reference to the possibility of applying to the magistrates for the conditions of bail to be varied or of appealing against the magistrates' decisions.

We may hope that even Lord Gifford would admit that offences have been committed at the mass pickets at which miners have been arrested. The "usual condition of bail" has been imposed, we may presume, to secure that those who have been charged do not commit an offence on bail, pending the hearing of each case to decide on guilt or innocence.

The courts and the statutes presume innocence: interestingly, Lord Gifford refers to the policy of the courts and police as being designed "not to prevent further crime being committed..." (my emphasis) whereas the words of the statute are "does not commit an offence". Yours faithfully, M. D. VARCOE-COCKS, 3 Onslow Court, Drayton Gardens, SW10.

From Mr A. D. R. Holland Sir. Lord Gifford's letter (July 19) completely ignores the enormous strain now being placed on the Nottinghamshire magistrates by Mr Arthur Scargill and his storm-Our system of magistrates assumes a widespread observance of the law. It cannot function effectively in a situation involving an orchestrated campaign to breach the peace in a narrow area. With typical common sense, the magistrates appear to have decided to contain the problem by a sensible interpretation of the Bail Act, leaving open, presumably, a defendant's option to appeal bail con-ditions to a higher court, whilst doing a greater service to their miner clients if they dropped this silly legal quibble and, instead, used all their undoubted talents to persuade Mr Scargill to observe all the laws and him on a particular day.

ANTHONY D. R. HOLLAND. Windlesham Manor. Windlesham,

Summer of discontent

From Professor Frank Muserove Sir, Your timely leading article (July teckles fundamentals. It errs only in underestimating Scargill and the power of unreason.

Scargill is in fact far more dangerous, amoral and powerful than Mosley ever was. Mosley did not effectively control a key sector of the economy. Nor did he lead men of such elemental passions and education and understanding.

The NCB has shown quite astonishing naiveté. Letters to miners and big advertisements addressed to them in the press assume not only that miners read but that they understand such words as "economic" and "environment". They do not. Their conceptual range does not extend much beyond

"scab". The present strike is a terrible indictment of our educational system, which leaves very simple No man should work down a pit.

We must hasten the day when there are virtually no miners left and mining is, as far as is humanly possible, automated. It is precisely modernization towards this (genuinely humane) end that Scargill

'Bias' at the OU

From Professor R. C. Smith

Sir, May I make one correction to your commendable leader about the Open University (July 9)? It is misleading to say that "the OU's financing has already been settled up to and including 1986". What the university has been informed about are provisional advance indications of grant for 1985 and 1986, which the DES describe as "significant reductions on level funding" and which are to be reviewed in the course of the annual public expendi-

The university has registered its concern about the level of these indicated provisional allocations, and hopes to persuade the Secretary of State that they should be increased, since if they are implemented they will seriously damage the university and the provision made for its students.

Yours faithfully, R. C. SMITH, Acting Vice-Chancellor, The Open University, Walton Hall, Waiton Milton Keynes, Buckinghamshire. July 9.

Prisoners of gender

From Mr Rollo Myers

Sir, Queen Victoria had been on her throne for 55 years when I was born and a large part of my life has been spent in France. It was therefore with great interest that I perused the article by John P. Harris (July 16) in his Paris diary column entitled

The French language, of course, is one of the most subtle and refined of all European tongues, despite its relatively limited vocabulary (compared, for example with our own); but for the foreigner it is full of

Wigan market

From Mr Henry Tennant Sir. The decision of local government in Wigan to demolish their thriving market hall in the name of urban regeneration invites ridicule and contempt. A much loved institution in the town, it provides a vital centre of employment and local cultural identity that no shopping centre could ever hope to match. It is a home to 200 independent companies which promotes entreeurship and an acumen for selfreliance, valued qualities which are lost in retail outlet chains.

There is no excuse for local and central government to continue in the arrogance that they are a better judge of how the local environment should be shaped as opposed to the wishes of the people themselves - 50,000 of them in this case. Mr Jenkin would earn some much needed support in the North-west if he put an end to this farce. Yours faithfully,

Never-never land

From Mr B. R. W. Gofton Sir, If you draw a line on the map roughly south-west from Filey until it reaches Middleton-on-the-Wolds after passing by Ruston Parva, you will find that it goes straight through Thwing, Fifty or sixty years ago this village was, by some in the area (particularly, perhaps, on the coast), pronounced "Twing", and it would have been hotly denied that there was no such place.
I have been waiting for someone living in those parts to write and say that Twing survives to this day, but Thwing seems to sit more happily with neighbouring Kirby Grindalythe, Foxholes, Fridaythorpe, Fimher and Wetwang. Yours faithfully.

Dressage to music

From Mr George Speaight Sir, While wishing Jennie Loriston-Clarke and Dutch Courage every success in turning themselves into the Torvill and Dean of British dressage, (sports feature, July 3) one must make the point that dressage to music is nothing new.

Philip Astley produced a cotillion with eight mounted horsemen at the Olympics in 1806, and by the last decades of the nineteenth century haute école in the circus had reached such a peak of perfection that the Baron de Vaux could write of Anna Fillis that "equitation is for her no longer a science but an art. No man who is susceptible to those two great seductions, the woman and the horse, could have before his eyes a more adorable spectacle." The insensitivity of the GLC and some other local authorities in banning circuses with animal acts from the grounds they control is depriving us of the pleasure of admiring haute ecole in the place where it can be best appreciated, the CITCUS TIME. Stopping up holes in safety net

From the Leader of Social Services of the Salvation Army

Sir, It would be terribly easy to draw the wrong conclusions from the story described in The Times (July, 20) by Richard Govett and Jorgen Saunte if one is restricted only to the facts given.

The man described in the letter is now, sadly, dead. He died in Westminster Hospital last Tuesday. following a heart attack. Our officers from the Great Peter Street hostel were with him when he died, for they had long acquaintance with him and had kept him for long periods without remuneration in the hostel to try and help him. On the day he was brought to our hostel at 11pm by the couple who found him in Pimlico he had discharged himself from Westminster Hospital, where he was receiving treatment for a gangrenous leg. Indeed, in the previous fortnight he had discharged himself from bospi-tal three times.

He was a 64-year-old man, perhaps looking much older because of a serious drink problem, which left him frequently drunk and.

difficult to manage. The practice in our hostels is not to admit people after 10pm, when the duty officer goes to bed, unless they are referrals from officers or the police who phone in. The security man who answered the door at 11pm would no doubt have related this policy to the callers.

The reason for the policy is to safeguard those who are aiready asleep in the hostel and as a precautionary measure for our staff in these days of indiscriminate violence. Most vagrants wanting accommodation for the night know that they have to seek it early in the evening. The security man at our hostel actually recognised the man with the couple and saw that, whilst he was, not excessively inebriated, he showed sufficient signs of drunkenness to become a problem to others sleeping in the hostel, as he had so often been in the past. Perhaps the Church Army's reluctance to admit him was related to this factor.

If advice is wanted from people who do care deeply about some of the drop-outs in our society and who know the difficulties of managing them, it would be that, if dissatisfied with the answer from the security man at the door, they should ask to speak to the duty officer, who can then make a judgment on the ·matter. With his experience he could well give reasons why admission to the hostel could not be granted, or just there and then decide to take the person in.

Yours sincerely ROY LOVATT. Leader of Social Services. The Salvation Army, 101 Queen Victoria Street, EC4 July 20.

Highly rated

No musical chairs

From the Chairman of the London Symphony Orchestra Sir, The photographic session which took place with Mr Mark McCor-mack and the LSO on the Barbican concert platform was no secret to the Barbican, contrary to your Diary statement of July 4, and in fact they recommended the photographer. Secondly, no one has been approached by anyone in the LSO for the position of general manager and this will remain the case until all the enquiries are in from our advertisements. Thirdly, I did fly to Vienna last month to invite Mr Lorin Maazel to conduct some concerts with the LSO in the Barbican and we are delighted that he has accepted. Your inference that "a straight swap could be in the offing" as music director between Mr Abbado and Mr Maazel is a mile from the mark, as it is well known that Mr Abbado last year signed a new five-year contract with the LSO as music director. Finally, at no time has there been a meeting with Mr Ian Maclay, of the RPO, at which the possibility of the RPO taking over as the Barbican resident orchestra was aired.

Yours sincerely, ANTHONY CAMDEN, Chairman, London Symphony Orchestra, Barbican Centre, Barbican, EC2.

From Mr Adrian Room Sir, Mr Douglas B. Hague asks (July 14) how he should fashion a Jolly

The famous flag of piracy ("skull and crossbones") represents, fairly conventionally, a human skull over two crossed bones. Brandon of Oakbrook [Speeches delivered July 19]

The prohibition in section 40 (1) of the Powers of Criminal Courts Act 1973 against an appeal from the making of a criminal bankruptcy order was subject to the exception that an appeal could be brought where the issue was that the court, in making the bankruptcy order; had exceeded the power conferred on it by Parliament.

on it by Parliament.

A criminal bankruptcy order could be made on a conviction for conspiracy to steal, in relation to individual burglaries alleged to have been committed in furtherance of been committee in insurance of the conspiracy, although the defendant had never admitted any particular burglary nor admitted the loss or damage alleged to have resulted therefrom.

The House of Lords distnissed an appeal by Douglas Roy Cain from the judgment of the Court of Appeal (Criminal Division) (Lord Lane, Lord Chief Justice, Mr Justice Bingham and Mr Justice Taylor) affirming, inter clic, a criminal bankruptcy order made against him as Soaresbrook Crown Court on conviction of conspiracy to steal conviction of conspiracy to steal and conspiracy to rob. robberies and one attempted robbery, all in pursuance of the two conspiracies of which he was convicted, he was not charged with any of them, nor did he ask for any of them to be taken into consideration upon sentence,

By section 40(1) "no appeal shall lie against the making of a criminal bankruptry order". However, there was a line of cases in which the Court of Appeal had implied a limitation on orders that were by statute "unappealable", adopting a statute 'unappealable', adopting a distinction between 'merits' and 'jurisdiction' and allowing appeal to he for want of jurisdiction. The ratio of those cases was that the statutory prohibition of appeal had to be construed by reference to the provisions in the Criminal Appeal Act 1968 dealing with sentence, a criminal bankrupacy order being a sentence for the purposes of the Act

The courts had been right to maintain in full the right of appeal against sentence and to construe statutory prohibitions of appeal as not applicable to sentences not authorized by law. It was a reasonable inference not to be gainsaid save by specific statutory provision that where Parliament prohibited an appeal against sentence it was dealing with the discretionary power of the court to make the order and not addressing its prohibition to orders defective in

The 1973 Act did not say so; indeed it made it clear that the process of establishing whether the loss was the result of an offence only began after the defendant had been coavicted of the offence. pursuant to the contract.

It was at the sentencing stage that the court had to make up its mind whether the facts existed which enabled a criminal bankrupacy order. to be made and whether it should exercise its power to make the order.

An order could be properly made if it appeared to the court at that stage that the losses suffered by others were the result of any conspiracy of which the defendant had been convicted. That was what had been done in the present case and the appeal would be dismissed.

Air ticket exchange contract Before Mr Justice Beldam [Judgment delivered July 13]

An agreement whereby airline tickets were bought on the plaintiff's behalf in Iran with Iranian currency, behalf in Iran with Iranian currency, brought to England, and a sterling refund obtained on them for the plaintiff's benefit was an "exchange contract" within stricle VIII of the Bretton Woods Fund Agreement, and because such a contract was unenforceable in England, by reason of section 2(b) of that article which had been enacted into English law by the Bretton Woods Agreements Order in Council (SR&O 1946 No 36), the plaintiff could not succeed in an action on a cheque issued pursuant to the contract.

Mr Justice Beldam so held in a Lordship was satisfied that that was reserved judgment in the Queen's Beach Division, dismissing an action brought by the planniff, Mr Ahmed Mansouni, against the couract was unenforceable under defendant, Mr Pritam Raj Singh, claiming payment of £33,334 due to him on a cheque which had been drawn but subsequently countermanded by the defendant, but dismissing the defendant's counter-claim for the repayment of sums exchange contract for the purposes

HOLIDAY RAPCAING BOOK DIRECT-

Prices for long-haul holidays

Long-haul holidays, short-term benefits in the number of Britons taking package holidays iong-panj destinations over was forecast this week by.

Kuoni, the leading operator in this sector of the market. During the past year, longhami holidays have shown a growth of 5 per cent, but Kuoni predicts that it is only a matter of time - albeit years rather than months - before holiday prices increase and start reflecting more accurately the extra distance and costs involved. "It is simply not rational to pay the same £500 for a longhaul holiday as for a short-haul destination which might be four times closer to your departure

Two villa-holiday operators have come up with special deals for summer late-bookers. American Express is offering a week's free rental of a Fiat 127 to customers taking one of its villa holidays in Sardinia between now and the end of August. Amex says this offer will save holidaymakers more than £100. Blue Arrow Holidays will give a week's free villa or apartment holiday next winter to all customers who book a full-price summer holiday of any duration in selected villas in the Algarve or Denia on the Costa Bianca, or in any of its properties in Majorca. Most tour operators reserve the right to pass on surcharges caused by government action, such as increases in VAT or airport taxes abroad, and for the coming winter several companies have said they will pass on increases in the cost of aviation fuel. Further information from The Travel Club (Upminster 24000).

Sail away

Standby transatlantic fares. originally introduced by the airlines to compete with Sir Freddie Laker's Skytrain, have been extended to sailings between Southampton and New York on Cunard's QE2. The fare is a flat-rate £395 per person one-way, based on double occupancy of a cabin, and standby bookings will be confirmed at least two weeks before sailing. The cheapest normal one-way fare in the summer peak season is £805.

The Times Garden Project, Month 11

Growth points in need of scrutiny

The Times gården project in west London is now nearly one year old. No more work towards planning the garden can be done until the adumn, and contine maintenance is all that is necessary at the moment

The dry spring has meant that none of the plants have achieved normal growth; as a result they have made less of an impact than we hoped. New plantings this past spring and winter needed water much more than established plants which had fairly deep roots.

Summer pruning of the fruit trees is called for and young trees in particular should not be allowed to make too much growth. The trees should be specificated to the control of the contro encouraged to make fruiting spurs and this can only be done by reducing lateral growth, Where growth has been vigorous, reduce laterals by about half their length with a sharp pair of secateurs.

The grass in the garden is growing quite strongly and needs to be encouraged. Cutting should be done as often a possible, I would suggest once a veek as this does not take off too much growth with each cut. Feeding should be done little and often. In the first season after sowing, I prefer to feed gently every three weeks. Feeding should only be done if

Shrubs are taking off now and it is important to keep the bushes trained so they retain an attractive shape. Evergreens need little pruning and they can be left to grow. Decidnous shrubs are different, shoots appear to go mad and grow out of character. Cut them back or remove them at source. As far as variegated shrubs are concerned, any green shoots that appear must be cut out as soon as they are seen. This is often the plant reverting to its green form, which is nearly always more vigorous than the vari-

Encouraging signs: Petunias in full flower, one of the bright spots of the first year's work

The warm and sometimes wet weather has brought out the weeds and Ashley Stephen son's warming about Oxalis corymbosa has come home to roost. Last autumn he pointed out the weed, which looks like innocent clover, in the narrow border suming down the side of the house and noted that it can spread rapidly.

It has now reached all the borders including the large.

rear area. It grows so easily that we are reduced to trying to check it by lifting the plant's root bulbs individually with a kitchen fork. But it seems we may be fighting a louing battle.

Hopes for a sizable apple crop have been dashed by the June drop. Almost all the apples duly fell, leaving one tree bare and a single apple on the Cox's orange pippin years for crops of raspberries. New cares are strong and healthy and they must now be given the space they require to ripen properly so that next year's truit will be as good. It is also time to remove the weed cover if you have not done so already. Do not dig deeply as raspberries are shallow rooters and could do untold harm.

All the cares which carried fault this Many of the shrubs con tinge to do well but the buddleis has begun to suffer boughs and dropped. All the borders show good

Cool blue poppies

Although they are known as the blue popoles of the Far East, not all of the Meconopsis family are in fact blue. Much sought after as they are so distinctive, they are unlike any other plant; their common name implies that they belong to the poppy family, Papaversceae, and indeed the foliage and flowers are a little reminiscent of the more commonly grown popples.

The main condition for successful cultivation is lime-free soft, which should be moist but not too wet. Good soil is important and although cood soli is important and although it does not have to be very rich, it should be high in humus.

Most are quite hardy; they are less happy in warmer parts of the country and should be planted in as near woodland conditions as possible, where they are sheltered from drying or cold winds.

Correct planting is essential. Never Correct planting is essential. Never deep plant the crowns of any of this family; they should be planted so that the crown of the plant is level with the surface of the soil.

with the surface of the soil. There are several forms. One of the best is Meconopsis betanicifolia. Now in flower, the rich, deep blue petals stand out from their woodland setting and under good conditions, the flowers will reach 4ft although they are usually smaller than that: Clumps can be quite big and strong. Reproduced best by division, it is possible to get seed from some suppliers seed from some suppliers (Thompson and Morgan, for example).

M grands has larger flowers than betonictfolia, and the blue colouring is just as intense. Grandis flowers a little earlier, but if conditions were right, you could get both in flower at the same time. A group known as M x sheldonii

What these two tapes underline is that snippets of football work better on video than snippets of cricket. While it is possible to onvey the essence of a football match (however misleadingly) with a couple of minutes of goals and near misses, cricket -even one-day cricket - cannot be encapsulated in the same

The Race For the Champion-ship is an expert piece of encapsulation, giving the story of the 1983/84 Canon League season from the opening shots last August to Liverpool's eventual triumph a couple of months ago. Drawing on both BBC and ITV coverage, it misses little and manages to cram in 125 goals - a striking rate of more than one per minute of video running time.

now, but television does an extraordinarily comprehensive job. What with the speed of the camera, the ability to get in close, immediate action replays and coverage of the same incident from different angles, the armchair spectator gets so much more than the man on the terraces that it hardly seems worth going (ah, but the atmosphere ...).

Where football, unlike cricket, still lags is in the quality of commentary and analysis. Of course the game moves faster than cricket, giving less time for reflection. But too often the commentary is on the level of what a fantastic save!" when that is precisely what the viewer has just seen for himself.

In the age of Don Bradman camera work was still largely hit and miss. If the fall of a wicket was captured while it happened this was a bonus; more often the which may be added lack of colour, The Bradman Era is a tape rich in atmosphere and nostalgia and no cricket sollower will want to miss it. Here are glimpses of five England-Australia rubbers in which Bradman was a key figure, produced by the Australian Broadcasting Corporation and narrated by that erstwhile bowler of fiery leg breaks, Bill O'Reilly.

Curiously missing out 1930 (and arguably the greatest Bradman innings, his 254 at Lord's) the tape starts with the bodyline tour and ends with the famous Hollies googly at the Oval, which toppled the great man for a duck and left his Test average at 99.96 instead of the 100.00 that a single boundary would have given him.

mostly unfamiliar, from the 1934 series in England.

Among the vignettes of 1934 are the Australians desperately at sea against Verity's spin on a Lord's numer (shades of Laker 22 years later) and the impish Patsy Hendren chuckling his way to a Test century at the age of 45. And for those who have only read about Clarrie Grimmett, here is a chance to see his amazingly casual action (how could he have been so accurate?).

Speaking of actions, there is a fascinating comparison between Harold Larwood and Ray Lindwall running up to deliver in which it is almost impossible to tell which is which; unfortunately such insights are rare. There are, it must hastily be added, clips galore of Bradman himself, leaving you in no doubt of his qualities: the speed of his eye and his merciless execution.

Nice surprises from a new frontier

Of all the new wine countries New Zealand is probably the most recent - the first vines were planted by an Anglican missionary as late as 1890. And it took another century and a half for the New Zealanders to get used to drinking table wine at all, for until 1970 the vast majority of their grapes were turned into sticky fortified wines. In addition, New Zealand's first efforts at table wine were made mostly from hybrid grapes such as the sweet black Albany Surprise with its unpleasant exotic foxy taste.

The wine industry was also held back in the early days both by a prohibition movement and Phylloxera, which has been a problem ever since it first arrived in the 1880s.

So it is all the more remarkable that in just 10 years the new generation of New Zealand grape growers and winemakers have turned their industry into one of the most technologically advanced in the world. On a trip there earlier viticulture". Admittedly most this year virtually every winery of the hybrid have now gone,

Youthful zest at its best

There is something appealing about watching talented young players engaged in serious combat over the chess-board The chess may be wanting in certain technical aspects; the players may not be conversant with up-to-date opening theory, or, if they are then they may be deficient in technical knowledge as regards the endgame. But these deficiencies are often compensated for by a wonderful flow of interesting ideas and lively, dashing attacks.

This was illustrated at the semi-finals and finals of this year's Times British Schools Championship tournament. It should be emphasized that in those two days at St Ermin's, we were watching four teams of fine chess-players who had shown their strength by beating some 500 schools to reach the finals. There were the title-holdcrs. Queen Mary's Grammar School of Walsail, the Royal Grammar School, Newcastle, (who came third last year), and two strong contending teams from St Paul's, London, and

Plymouth College.
In the semi-finals Plymouth mct and defeated the cham-pions by 4-2. The Royal Grammar School played the young and strong St Paul's team. The fact that the average age of the St Paul's team (15.8) was about a year and a half younger meant that the Royal Grammar School had to win by at least 31/2 to 21/2 -and they did exactiv that.

In the finals next day the Royal Grammar School beat Plymouth College by a massive margin of 5 to 1, thereby winning the title for the first time; St Paul's came third by narrowly defeating Queen Mary's by 3½ to 2½.

A prize for the best-played game went to Martin Hazelton who defeated David Stevenson with the following brilliantly fierce attack in the semi-final match between the Royal Grammar School and St Paul's. White: M. Hazelton. Black: D. Stevenson. Sicilian Defence.

End of term report

Breaking up is so very hard to do

We all like Fridays in our house: the chief breadwinger because he can look forward to a couple of days of cakes and ale, I because with any luck the week's deadlines will have been met and because my cleaning lady will have turned a menagerie into a menage again. Even the dog, showing un-characteristic intelligence, ap-pears to know that Fridays are auspicious and makes a great show of wagging the stump that passes for a tail.

And my son loves Fridays because they hold a tamblizing promise of jolly weekends ahead – before reality has taken the edge off - and there is no penalty for procrastination. Usually, that is.

Next Friday will be different and none of us is looking forward to it. For next Friday (or yesterday by the time you read this) my son will say goodbye to the 24 classmates with whom he has shared time for the past six years and to the teachers - and one in particular - who have variously cared for, chastised, encouraged him.

He has been in a bad humow all week. At first I thought it must be something he ate, lack of sleep or the onset of a precocious adolescence. Then I realized that he is in fact mourning for an irrevocable past. Always one to anticipate sadness (a trait inherited from his mother), he has run through the dress rehearsal of the last day a dozen times, knowing that the performance will be final,

At school everyone is trying to pretend that nothing is happening. End-of-term activities continue apace, although a little frenzied. In the last month my son and his classmates have sung in the Royal Festival Hall, received a near standing ovation in the parish church when they repeated the performance (the first time the aisles had ever rocked to Carmen), staged the comforting familiarity of a wonderful dance show in which fraternity and their individual talents were demonstrated to near perfection. (That the child is indeed father to the man was obvious on the benches where the parents sat feeling suddenly old, wondering just when the fledglings learned to fly.) Farewell parties are derway with no one needing a birthday as an excuse.

It all looks very jolly but the tension is there. Some of the children - those who are going to the secondary school of their choice - are less apprehensive about the future than those who have been forced to accept places at second or even thirdchoice schools. All of them know that having spent the last year being "top dogs", they now face a further six or seven years' climb up the educational ladder. starting at the bottom. And

Of the many values they have acquired over the past six years, those of friendship, solidarity and loyalty are outstanding There have been fallings-out of course, times when they "went off" even their closest friends, when X was "a wet", Y was "just a silly girl" and Z a straightforward "pain in the neck". Differences remain but I have been amazed at the tolerance they have increasingly shown towards each other. It has a lot, I am sure, to do with the school itself and the quality of teaching. Of course I am biased, but along with most of the other parents whose children attend the school, I do not believe I could have chosen only criterion by which a school is indeed. As far as literacy and numeracy are concerned, the school also has an excellent record; and the quality of its musical training is widely admired. The staff show a dedication to their charges that may not be unique but is certainly well above many parents' expectations. There is one in particular (who would murder me were I to identify her) whose many gifts include the ability to raise each child's awareness of its own potentia so that it leaves the school with a degree of self-confidence (but not arrogance)

If I seem to be singing the praises of one particular school somewhat loudly, it is because, although I have made many mistakes since my son was born, choosing his primary school was one of my better

There will be many wet eyes and lumpy throats at the school gates next week. Autumn is perhaps the ideal time to visit the famous cities and great historic sites of the Mediterranean.

The weather is comfortably warrn. And places tend to be less crowded, so you can appreciate them as a traveller not a tourist. Autumn is also the time when the ancient Greeks celebrated the mysteries of the corn-goddess. Demeter. She ensured that the seed-corn sown in October was reborn in the Spring.

This is only one of the fascinating insights on a 1984 Swan Hellenic Cruise Each visit is more rewarding because, whether the place is Athens or Alexandria, Jerusalem or Istanbul, we help you see it in contest.

Cabins are still available on many of our Autumn cruses. Fares from £661 include most shore excursions, all gratuities and comprehensive insurance. Peter Readman was a passable schoolboy-standard horn player, and Victoria a more than passable pianist, but when they spent their honeymoon at the Salzburg Festival in 1981 neither of them could have dreamed that they were about to play an important part in establishing a new international orchestra.

While they were in Salzburg, an old friend, the conductor James Judd, assistant to Claudio Abbado at the European Community Youth Orchestra, invited them to dinner and presented them with an audacious proposal. A group of choice to help with the business side of setting up the orchestra.

the ribald. However, by this time he himself had complete faith in the practicality of the scheme.

In May 1982 he took a gamble. He brought members of the embryo orchestra from The Netherlands, Germany, Denmark, France, Italy and all over Britain to London, where they camped out on the floors and Jeremy Flint sofas of friends. He booked the Merchant Taylors' Hall in the

If that first Mozart concert, conducted by Judd and Abbado and with Bishop-Kovacevich as soloist, had not been an outright success the orchestra would have been still-born. As it was, no one who was present is ever likely to forget that night. The quality of the playing, and. above all the enthusiasm of the players, carried all before them, and by the end of the party that followed £20,000 had been raised in donations and spon-

A little over two years later it is hard to believe that the COE is so young, both in terms of its existence and the average age of the members, which is still only 24. They play together for six months each year, with a full schedule to 1986 taking in such major international events as the Rossini Festival at Pe the City of London Festival, together with tours of Italy, Britain, Germany, Austria and, for the first time, the United

Hungary, with another Hungarian to come. The orchestra is largely self-governing by com-mittee, and the players are guaranteed a salary of £400 per month from sponsorship, which is treated as an advance on performing and recording fees. Because they work together for only half the year, they can not only be sure of the best engagements during that time, but also develop their careers as soloists or in groups outside it. Douglas Boyd, the Scottish oboist and a recent winner of the International Young Concert Artists' Competition in New York, points out that this may also help the players to avoid the debilitating effects of avoid the debiliant electric of familiarity and advancing age. "If you play together all the time you can't keep up the intensity. For us every member is important, and each engage ment is different.

Although most of the founders are still with the orchestra. the intense programme of travel will no doubt ensure that the average age does not rise too far; the onset of mortgages and children will lead to a natural wastage.

According to Pal Banda, the Hungarian cellist, the logistics of getting everyone together means that full rehearsals have to be kept to the minimum and that everybody is keyed up for performance. In time the COE may find a permanent rehearsal base, but immediately there is a recording of the Mozart Symphonies 40 and 41 for Decca and the Barbican on Monday night. The honeymoon con tinues.

Then, in among the musical bedding plants and the programme sellers' pink-ribbo boaters, stepped the Kings Singers, filling the Town Hall on Thursday night with a programme of songs from the 1890s, the 1920s, from Spain, Italy and Elizabethan England and with the long-delayed first performance in ancient Greek of James Wood's Drama. Based on passages from Aristophanes' The Birds, it is a cunning, aurally astute synthesis of Greek choric and oratorical method, Gamelan-like "accompaniment", and the individual and corporate talents of the singers.

Part bird, part human, part puppet, they move speedily from speech to speechsong, nervousness to nobility. It is a linguistic and imaginative tour de force; absorbing, timelessly apposite in its satire and, at last, great festive fun.

Platonov makes his star entry as claim as the dominant figure. A a scourge of Russia's moral forceful emancipated woman who has nothing to do in he life, she conducts her affair with a power and independence as free from theatrical stereotype as Platonov himself. Charlotte Cornwell plays her with an authority and vitality that light up the stage.

Ian McKellen's Piatonov excels, partly through his volatile contrast with the surrounding company. Switching in an instant from moral denunciation to teasing, and from high-minded restraint to reckless seduction, his reactions are always two steps ahead of one's expectations.

often seen on Gardener's World, which may be excused on the grounds that too great a show of phetic music through the use of technical skill might undermine the credibility of people of the soil. Women of our Century is, however, a series bred out of the strain of feminist reasoning which holds that anything achieved by any woman is of supreme significance.

Lest this logic be suspected, the titles are run past a ridiculous dressing-table stilllife of a posy of flowers, a sepia picture of the subject and a ritual object - in this case the peeress's robes. A little of her intellectual rigour in the series's conception would have made the exercise a great deal more worthwhile.

RPO/Groves Royal Academy of Arts

It was indeed a mixed bag that ended the current season of Youth and Music Cushion Concerts, held as usual amid the cheerful surroundings of the Royal Academy's Summer The most eye-catching work on the programme was Andrzei Panufnik's Concertino for timpani, percussion and strings, in which the composer himself conducted the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra and its two appropriate and excellent prin-cipals, Michael Baker and Nicholas Cole.

Written as a test piece for the Shell-LSO competition in 1980, the Concertino has already

Concert established itself as an essential part of the percussionist's repertoire. It is easy to see why, for as well as providing 20 minutes or so of easy but never boring listening it demands of its soloists a high degree of accomplishment though without too many complexities of rhythm

Control of dynamic and of articulation is crucial, and nowhere more so than in the central third movement, Inter-mezzo, where the soloists exchange roles in a tricky repartee of tuned drums, played by the percussionist, and triangles and suspended cymbals, played by the timpamst.

But the most attractive movement is the fourth, called about too much. Canto IL Here Panufnik is in his element, providing atmos-sustained strings under the shimmering sounds of vibraphone and glockenspiel and cerie timpani glissandos, before the frenetic finale transports us to the quickfire antiphony of a cadenza for drums and timpani. Before this, we heard a reading under the direction of Sir Charles Groves of Vaughan Williams's Fantasia on a theme of Thomas Tallis which just failed to attain its proper degree of ethereality partly because of the thickness of string sound encouraged by the gallery's resonance. And to end, a slightly disappointing account of Mozarr's Symphony No 40, in which details of articulation had obviously not been thought

However, the Government needs the money. National Savings is budgeted to contribute £3 billion to funding during 1984/85, and returns for the first quarter of the financial year show the Department is lagging badly.

The conjunction of yesterday's National Savings package with the surprise announcement of £700m of new taplets for the gilts market suggests that the Government is making an all-out bid to fund borrowing during the banking month of

The Government seems to be hoping for some kind of minor miracle around the beginning of August. The 27th issue of certificates is merely suspended from August 7, with the new issue coming in on the following day. Perhaps therefore the Chancellor is gambling that interest rates will have shown signs of peaking by then, making the 28th issue a sell-out, which should tie up the funding for banking August. Re-enter, subsequently, the 27th, cheaper, issue?

Such a strategy, if this is the correct interpretation, ignores the knock-on effect of yesterday's package on building societies which have yet to make up their minds over mortgage and deposit rates. The spectacle of the public sector building for funds should be enough to convince any building society chief to technic his own deposit base as rightly as possible. Merrill has taken corrective measures. A new chief executive has announced a customer rather than product-oriented approach - how was it ever possible to forget the customer? - and the huge workforce is being cut. Significantly, however, similar measures are being applied by rivals: the very profitable Salomon Brothers has begun an internal review of structure and overheads.

Nor do the warnings apply only to the likes of American Express, the big money centre banks, or even commodity-oriented companies such as Drexel, Burnham Lambert. There is a message for those in the City who have embraced enthusiastically the gospel of the financial supermarket. It might even colour Merrill's attitude towards getting hitched with a London

quiet days in the gilts market of funding instruments, which may, in retrospect, turn The bad news is out to have been full of potent implications. The authorities clearly signalled by their activities that they are looking for a rally. Yet this week's detailed money supply figures for banking June place some question marks, over the justification in for a bounce. Three-month interbank rates eased back to 12 % per cent. The Treasury bill tender dropped back a fraction. The authorities sold some stock in the morning, and then an-nounced additional taps in the

was made in the afternoon. after £700m of taplets were announced. The wags added that the stocks had been created without regard for sensitive market signals, or yield curve considerations. Validation of this raucous comment comes partly via detailed banking June money figures. Crudely, PSBR was underfunded, as sterling came under pressure, while domestic demand for credit rocketed. Seasonally adjusted bank lending to the private sector, jumped by £1 billion to £2.8 billion.

Both the External items and the banks' net non-deposit liabilities turned positive that the total 2 per cent in £M3 stemmed from adverse factors across the board.

But the authorities could muster gilt sales of only £374m. The rest of the £936m offset to domestic credit

The bad news is that banking July may have seen similar pressure on the agercgates; the Bank of England's bill mountain, for example, rose by £1½ billion. As yesterday's interest rate movement domonstrated, National Savings, the alternative funding arm, may be petering out. Hence the need to crank up the funding programme, even though the market is still convalescing from recent traumatic events.

Cowan, de Groot

Spiderman, The A Team, and the rest of the television and connic-book super heroes have once again railied round to save Cowan, de Groot from the worst that the dastardly Russians could do.

Cowan's D. Dekker subsidiary has lucrative licensing agreements to manufacture characters, which have kept it consistently profitable. Dekker contributed about 60 per cent of trading profits last year and is probably worth more than the rest of the business put together.

By contrast, Cowan's prob-lems include the Russian Shop which lost £75,000 last year and has not made a profit since

The H&J wholesale cycle business made the worse loss -£85,000 - after the sale of the electric half of the business. It should now be breaking even.

M&G DIVIDEND FUND THE EVIDENCE: £10,000 invested at the launch of M&G Dividend

ES We are proud or the 1992. Fund has achieved over its 20-year life. We are proud of the record M&G Dividend

An investor of £10,000 at the Fund's launch in May 1964 has seen his income after basic-rate tax grow from £396 in the first full year to £2,018 in 1984.

By contrast, a building society investor's income has fluctuated, rising from £486 in 1965 to £1,150 in 1980 and then falling back to £825 by 1984. So anyone who depended on a building society investment has suffered a cut in income over the last 4 years, whilst Dividend Fund investors continued to enjoy a steadily increasing income.

As for capital, its value would not have fluctuated in a building society, with the original £10,000 remaining intact. But anyone who invested £10,000 in Dividend Fund Income units in 1964 has turned his capital into £43,880 by the end of June, 1984, while receiving substantial and growing income throughout the period. An investment in the F.T. Industrial Ordinary Index would have grown to £23,286 over

Unit trusts are for long-term investment and not suitable for money you may need at short notice. This is because the price of units and the income from them may go down as well as up.

But if you need income which will grow and you can afford to take a reasonably long view, M&G Dividend Fund could be the ideal investment. You can be confident that M&G will continue to make income growth the prime objective for this Fund, and in the past this has been a successful policy for capital as

An extra allocation of units in Dividend Fund

The Fund invests in a wide range of ordinary shares. The aim is to provide a high and growing return with a yield about 50% higher than that of the F.T. Actuaries Alf-Share Index. On 18th July 1984 the estimated current gross yield was 6.76% at an offered price for Income units of 231.2p. Prices and ields appear daily in the Financial Times. An initial charge of 5% is included in the offered price; an annual charge, currently 1/2% (plus VAT) of the value of the Fund is deducted from gross ncome. Unitholders are now being asked to approve an increase in the annual charge to a maximum of 1% (plus VAT), although the Managers intend to restrict the increased charge to 34% at least until 1988. Distributions for income units are paid on 15th January and 15th July. The next distribution date. for new investors will be 19th January 1985. You can buy or self. writs on any business day. Contracts for purchase or sale will be due for settlement 2 or 3 weeks later. Remuneration is payable to accredited agents; rates are available on request. It is the term "any description" which is the crucial point, because no insurance broker has this cover.

As a result, all insurance brokers are operating illegally and have been for five years. The effects of this are already costing small investors con-siderable sums.

Many registered insurance brokers sold bonds in the failed, Gibraltar-based insurance company, Signal Life, which collapsed in August, 1982, owing investors more than £6m.

As it was an offshore insurance company, investors were not entitled to compensation under the Policyholders Protection Act, although investors in Signal's Gold Bond, were promptly compensated by the fund's trustees, the Hongkong

The unlucky ones who had bought Signal's Gilt Bond which had no trustee had no a flat fee of about £200.

Several successful actions against brokers have been brought in the past few months, but few investors have been are repudiating the claims, specifically excludes "insolvency of the insurer". Under the terms of the insurance

"The Department has no powers under the legislation to compel the IBRC to enforce the legislation - although, of course, we we will be talking to John Fryer about this".

Mr John Fryer is the secretary of the Insurance Brokers Registration Council. The responsibility for making sure that the brokers meet the terms of the legislation belongs with the council", said the department's spokesman. "But we do have powers to direct that the Statutory Instrument be changed. This is something which might have to happen."

The Statutory Instrument as it stands is probably unenforce-able and is clearly a blunder on the part of the legal draughts-men. No professional indem-nity insurer would be prepared to underwrite such a comprehensive risk. All PI policies contain exclusions and it is probably impossible to obtain PI cover "against loss arising from claims of any descrip-

PROBABLY THE MOST ENJOYABLE INVESTME YOU'LL EVER MAKE.

Just announced—new higher rate of 12.75% p.a. on Income Bonds. Paid regularly every month.

When it comes to enjoying life, an investment in National Savings Income Bonds can make all the difference. Interest is paid monthly, so you get extra money coming in regularly to spend enjoying life or simply to help pay the bills.

The difference a regular income makes. From 2nd September you'll get interest of 12.75% p.a., calculated on a daily basis and paid in full. (Rate until then 10% p.a.) The interest is taxable, but only if you pay tax. The interest is sent direct to your home or your bank on the 5th of each month.

This is what 12.75% p.a. earns you every month:

Conflict warning

If a solicitor was part of a firm which If a souctor was part of a tirm which acted as estate agent in house conveyancing, and which gained commission on the sale of the property, there must be a danger of a conflict of interest, said Mr Christopher Ward, a solicitor, at a seminar organized by the incorporated Society of Valuers & Auctioneers. Mr Ward expressed concern at how all elements of concern at how all elements of housebuying could satisfactorily come in one package.

He also said that the public should not be misled into thinking that all transfers were now easier due to the work of the Land Registry. "In fact, in many cases problems with boundaries and covenants are more complex than was the case before titles were registered", he said.

Top returns

The rise in interest rates is good news for investors who are now receiving the highest rast return (after taking into account inflation) for many years. Two building societies offering particularly attractive deals are the Learnington Spa and Chaltenham & Gloucests mington Spa's new fixed rate, fixed term, one-year Spe Bond is paying a guaranteed 9.25 per cent net of basic rate tax. This is equivalent to 13.21 per cant gross to a basic rate texpayer. Unlike most building society investmer which operate on a variable basis, the Spe-Bond pays a fixed rate. The minimum investment is $2,000 with a

Tax relief ruling

Many more people than initially expected will find that in spite of having proposal forms with their insurance company well before Budget day when Life Assurance Premium Reflet (LAPR) was abolished, they will not be entitled to tax reflet on their insurance policy.

The inland Revenue ruled that formal accentance of a proposal bad to have

The inland flavenue ruled that formal acceptance of a proposal had to have been issued by the insurance company by midnight on Budget day for the policy to quality for tax relief on pramiums. At first it was thought that only those people who had piled in at the last minute would not be eligible. But as one big insurer points out, at any time an insurence company has as much as 50.

Insurance company has as much as 50 per cent of its proposals in the pipeline being processed – some awaiting medicals, or clarification of small technical points.

But these people will sign be denied tax relief on their policies, some of whom had their proposals with the insurer anything up to six to eight weeks before the Budget.

Rate changes

Mildland Bank is increasing the interest on its high interest cheque account from 10 to 11 per cent from July 19. The minimum investment is £2,000, maximum £100,000. This is a cheque book account and no notice of withdrawal is required, but the minimum withdrawal is $200. interest is paid quarterly. Holders may also run a current account, free of bank charges if it's kept in credit.

The interest rate on Midland's monthly income deposit account is being increased from 8.5 to 10.75 per cent from August 16. This is a lump sum investment with a minimum of £2,000. Additions of £250 can be made at any time, and interest is paid monthly.

PENSIONS

Sting in the tail for insurers

In all the reactions to the Government's consultative document on personal portable pensions no one so far appears to have noticed a potential bombshell for the insurance industry tucked away in a clause near the end of the booklet.

The paragraph suggests that banks and building societies. among others, could offer personal pensions as well as the insurance companies. Because of their widespread branch networks the banks and friendly societies would have a tremendous marketing advantage over the insurance companies which have few branches. When a similar change was made in the change was made in the pensions market in Canada, insurance companies lost a huge amount of business.

In other respects, reactions to the proposals have been dis-tinctly mixed. Most insurance companies and independent advisers applaud the govern-ment's aims. But many feel there are enormous practical problems to be sorted out. And as one analyst commented, "it intends to be all things to all men and so begs many important questions".

One of the most crucial unmentioned issues is the tax situation of the new pensions.

Personal pensions plan, unveiled

Fowler sets out plans for portable pensions (The Times 17th July 1984)

Look to Save & Prosper for Britain's leading personal pension plan NOW

Anticipating the new freedom promised by Norman Fowler's Consultative Document on Personal Pensions, our Personal Retirement Account already provides maximum flexibility and control over pension arrangements. Quite simply it means that you can, without waiting for new legislation:

Save & Prosper's comprehensive range of tax-exempt pension funds.

* Have your own personal retirement account Your money is invested in your personal retirement account to build a pension based on the performance of the investment fund.

* Take your retirement account with you when you move jobs without any penalties or need to negotiate a transfer value with your employer.

* Change your employment status without penalty The unique feature of the Personal Retirement Account is that we have eliminated all charges when you change your employment status, for example from being employed to self-employed and vice versa.

* Watch your money working for you thanks to the statements which we automatically send you each year.

Why has Save & Prosper taken the initiative in offering the flexibility of the Personal Retirement Account ahead of legislation now promised by the Government? Because we believe that the Government means what it says in the Consultative Document—and because we believe that everyone should grasp this pensions opportunity with both hands as soon as possible.

It was a stirring effort on a heavely day and Baker-Finch, who has a 10-under-par half-way aggregate of 134, moved three strokes ahead of Lee Trevino (67), Nick Faldo (68) and Severiano Ballesteros

It was not entirely Australia's day, as Greg Norman lost his way on the inward nine as the wind got up to produce problems, although Tom Watson, partnering Norman, was unaffected as he moved closer towards the prospect of equalling Harry Vardon's record of six Open wins. For much of his round Bill Longmuir looked likely to move into second position until a seven at the 17th led to a 71 for 138. Fred Couples, who made an eagle two at the last, went round in 69, to be 139.

Baker-Finch has benefited from the advice of Peter Thomson - who gained one of his five Open wins at St Andrews - in much the same way that Ballesteros was helped earlier in his career by the wisdom of Roberto de Vicenzo.

Baker-Finch's only major problem in two superlative days came at the 10th in the first round, when he thought he had lost his ball. Fortunately, a spectator pointed out that some youngsters had stolen it and Baker-Finch was allowed to drop another ball, although Hale Irwin, his partner, while not disputing what had happened, was apparently unhappy at where the Australian was instructed to drop:

Even so, few can dispute Baker-Finch's right to be lead-ing the field after a splendid round in which he dropped only one shot - three-putting the fourth - and collected seven birdies, which included a monster putt of 50 feet for a two

There is an unmistakeable feeling that the adrenalin is beginning to pump vigorously through Ballesteros again. For the first time this year he looked at ease with himself on the course as he went about the to a driver and five iron. That television. So he is on the business of catching the leaders made a birdie a formality, as threshold of becoming the

There was a disappointment at the 11th, for his eight-iron tee shot just caught the trap, so that disappeared in the hole at the 16th. He approached the 17th at nine under par, one behind Baker-Finch, Such was his confidence that he was prepared inevitable shot that was a four in his mind, and a birdie dropped at the Road Hole. at the last However, his Indeed, he might have dropped arithmetic was undone as he two at the 17th since he came off the drive and the ball, helped by the wind, moved ight and out of bounds. That Longmuir should eventually take seven there, after also being compelled to play a recovery shot from the road, was more than a trifle unfair, as he had delivered the goods for most of the way in front of another appreciative packed house.

Longmuir confessed afterwards that he had been "dumb" to be so forceful at the 17th, and Trevino later confirmed that there is simply no plan of attack for the hole. "You play it as a par five and if you make a four, then you count that as a birdie"

In fact, Trevino dropped one of his two shots there, but he had seven genuine birdies in a round that suggested he could repeat his Open triumphs of 1971 and 1972. He birdied each of the first three holes, using a sand wedge to approach the also three-putted on two occasions and missed two other opportunities from inside 10

A few weeks ago, Trevino broke his beloved driver and is only now beginning to regain his confidence in the rebuilt club, which has a new shaft. He is also keeping his mind off the championship by spending much of his time making a film on the history of the game. "I was out with the film crew at 7 share of the lead that was his in am", Trevino said. "It's fun.

Faldo must develop a killer instinct

Nick Faldo, like Severiano Ballesteros, came to St Andrews this week with little recent form to pick him out of the pack. But like the Spaniard, he too seems to thrive on the big occasion. Whether or not he can develop Ballesteros's killer instinct remains to be seen over the next two tumultuous days of Open golf.

At 21, Faldo was joint seventh over the same course in 1978; since then he has never been lower than twelfth and in the last two seasons particularly he has waived the flag boldly on the last day. He is a more experienced golfer now in all respects than in 1978, and may even, on such an occasion, be able to throw off the domestic upheaval of a pending divorce action.

Faldo yesterday was accompanied by Craig Stadler, of America, and Nick Price, of South Africa, two golfers of much distinction, the former a winner of the United States Masters two years ago, the latter the present holder of the World Series title. Yesterday, however, they wer made to play-on parts as Faldo, not without an occasional alarm, piled on the pressure with a splendid round of 68, four under par, to add to his 69 of the day before. Stadler now lies eight strokes in his wake, Price 10 strokes.

With his handsome swing and with his handsome swing and commanding presence on a golf course, Faldo is an arresting figure in any case, but a beautifully judged pitch shot over the Swikan burn to eight feet and a sweetly rolled putt immediately quickened the public pulse. His sand wedge asked more of him at the third, not surprisingly, since he had driven uncomfortably close to a gorse bush, but again the putter obeyed his demand from 20 feet.

wrists as a fulcrum for rigid arms. He coaxed the ball brilliantly onto the green, but also the Sft putt cluded him.

He made partial amends with a much longer putt at the last after pitching into the Valley of Sin, ispired rather than daunted by a huge gallery, it seemed. Could het, perhaps, have something even more exhibatating to applaud tomorrow evening?

By now he was five under par for By now he was hive under par for the tournament, but sven in yesterday morning's blissful conditions the Old Lady of St Andrews is not to be treated with disrespect. The long fifth (564 yards) provided a timely reminder by trapping his drive in one of seven bunkers awaiting the pushed tee shot. She was making him pay for his eagle there on Thursday.

Thanks to his equable tempera-ment, however, Faldo remained admirably unmoved, and after two model fours he gathered in five birdies from the next six holes. Nor, with immaculate short irons, did he need any luck on the green, for he, holed out three times from only four feet, once from eight feet and once from 12 feet. Embedded in this flurry of birdies, however, was a four at the short 11th after he had

Short of a loss of control, only the 17th now threatened his position. It duly extracted a stroke. From a superb tee shot faded over the country club sheds, he took too much club (a one iron) for his second and finished uncomfortably close to the wall over the road. With no swing possible, he went down the shaft of an eight-iron, using his wrists as a fulcrum for rigid arms. He coaxed the ball brilliantly onto

The 35 points Hoste gained for his victory, to the 26 points of Kelly were enough for him to retain the emblem o points leadership.

Both LeMond and Hunault were active in he extremely fast final hour of racing yesterday. For a long time it looked as though two Frenchinders, Alain Bondue and Marc Madiot, would hang on to a tenuous lead, but the Panasonic-Raleigh team of Phil Anderson worked like Trojans to put an end to the escape.

Their best sprinter, Eric Vanderaerden, crashed two miles from the chequered flag. He will be trying again to win on the Champs Elysées tomorrow, as will Keily.

At a so-called flying stage in the outskirts of Geneva, midway through the iong, imbearably hot day, Kelly scored a brilliant sprint win to take over the points lead temporarily. On a wide road that curved to the left before the final straight, he wisly held the miside as Flanegraaf led Hoste in the centre. Graham has new target

By Srikumar Sen Boxing Correspondent

Herol Graham, who used to be the British, European and Commonwealth light-middleweight champion, sets out tomorrow to make his mark in the world as a middleweight. Even though Graham as a light-middleweight has beaten middleweights had little to do with him, claiming that he has yet to prove himself by campaigning fulltime in the division.

That is why Graham has picked Lindell Holmes, of Toledo, as his opponent at Sheffield United's ground tomorrow. Holmes has not only knocked out Britain's Roy Gumbs in seven rounds hut has beaten Buster Drayton, who knocked out Jimmy Cable in one round and Mark Kaylor in seven. If Graham impresses at Bramall Lane, both Kaylor, as British champion, and Tony Sibson, as European Herol Graham, who used to be Middleweights do not like Graham's quirky hit-and-run style and do not fancy chasing after him Holmes is stockily built and has: won his last three contests with quick knock-outs. He "comes to right", as they say in the trade. So he could prove an easy target for Graham's long arms, but I expect there will be many moments who we shall see Graham wriggling and squirming out of tight covners. squarming out of tight corners.

Kelly denied India and Pakistan to host World Cup

By a narrow margin, the International Cricket Conference voted at their annual meeting at Lord's on Wednesday and Thursday to accept the offer by India and Pakistan to hold the fourth World first time that it has not been staged in England.

In theory, it is right and proper for the tournament to be passed round — I hope Australia will promote it one day — and the harmony which prompted India and Pakistan to make their bid is pleasing. Having said that the chaos is horrific.

Short-pitched bowling and over rates had their annual airing, the Conference again shirking a hard line on bouncers. Member countries the organization required will be densiting.

From last year's tournament, Zimbabwe, who qualified by winning the ICC Trophy for Associate members (to be held again, in 1987, in the United Kingdom), drew £107,000, and full member countries will cach be guaranteed £75,000, plus their expenses, from a pool of £1 million. It could be more, but that will depend on the takings. There will be a total of £360,600 to be divided between the 18 associate members of the Conference.

There is sure to be much excitement of one kind and another. Two days will be allocated to each another, with only 60 overs needing to account must one try and interfere on political grounds with the selection of another's team. David Bryant came close to defeat before winning his opening singles manch in the world championships at Abendeen yesterday. The defending champion appeared to be heading for a reverse at the hands of the tenacious Welshmann Spencer Wilshire, but he played his way back to win 21-20 in 27 ends.

Bryant, seeking his third singles gold medal, was in trouble at 16-18 but delivered a superb last bowl to collect a valuable single. After Wilshire, a late replacement in the Wesh side, collected two more shots to open up a 20-17 lead, Bryant's brillance under pressure again.

of late that the Pulborough team is recovering form, and I expect the momentum to continue at Newbury today when the stable can celebrate a troble with Old Bailey (3.30), Raft (4.0) and Genericaist (4.30).

A good deal of attention will be focused on Raft's comeback in the Servenson Stakes. It is the intention of Harwood, in Kentucky for the Krencland Sales, to take on El Gran Sénor in York's Benson and Hodges Gold Cup next month if Raft passes today's test with flying colours.

His progress will be carefully monitored by Geoff Lawson, Harwood's able assistant, and while Raft's catter has been confined to two juvenile appearances has season there is no doubting the high esteem in which he is held.

Circus Plume set for Oaks double

From Our Irish Racing Correspondent, Dublin

Circus Plume and Meda Luna will re-fight their Epsom Oaks duel at the Currogh this afternoon when, for the first time, the Irish Oaks carries the sponsorship of Mr and Mrs Bert Firestone's Gilltown Stud.

The Firestones have taken over way support down to 6-1.

On her most recent outing in the group two Prix de Malleret, she got managed to complete the Epsom-Currugh double. This underlines the difficulty of Circus Plume's task. There were doubts before Epsom as to whether she would last out the one and a half miles as she is a

Prince Sabo to reign

From Desmond Stoneham, Paris

Prince Sabo could become the first English-trained horse to win the Prix Robert Papin since Sun Prince took the prestigious group I event Noblequest is unbeaten in his two took the prestigious group I event back in 1971. The strong English challenge for the five and half furlong Papin is made up with Cameroun and Hi-Tech-Girl. The best of the French should be Neshleanest and White Wedding.

Noblequest and White Wedding.
Only 11 days ago Prince Sabo made a great impession when taking the Chesterfield Stakes at Newmarket by three lengths from Chantaco. Young Generation to the outside to make his challenge and once the colt saw daylight he fairly outclassed his field in the final furlong. Prince Sabo had previously trotted up in Gueen Mary form. US tries Japanese 🕏 way of working

As four giant earth-moving machines rolled into action to start work on the site of Nissan's planned £1½ million car plant at Washington Newtown in Wearside, Trevor Fishlock reports from Smyrna, Tennessee, on how the Americans have taken to the Japanese style of management.

The day the ground was broken for the large Nissan plant in Tennessee there was a rowdy demonstration. Speeches were punctuated by shouts of "Go home, Japs". Trade unions paid for an aircraft to fly overhead towing a banner saying "Boycott Datsun: put America back to work".

A snowplough chosen to break the icy ground had its tyres slashed by protesters. It was an eruption of resentment at a time when American motor mamufacturing was in trouble: fat, inefficient and hidebound, hobbled by outdated management and tion practices, feeling the heat of the Japanese challenge. The Nissan plant goes to the heart of the matter. It offers an example and a provoking challenge to the industry and to the United Automobile Workers (UAW) which campaigns to restrict Japanese imports.

Nissan, which makes Datsun cars and lorries, is the world's largest motor manufacturer. Its American plant at Smyrna 20 miles south of Nashville, built for £471m, is the largest Japanese investment in America. It is under American management and, apart from 15 Japanese, its 1,900 work-force are American, mostly Tennessean. A fifth are women.

The factory has been in production for just over a year. It is judged by Fortune magazine to be one of America's ten best-run companies. It makes pick-up lorries recently assessed by the lead-ing trade journal to be the best in the country. Next year the plant starts making small cars and expanding its work-force.

The management says that union membership is a matter for the workers. But so far the union has failed to make any inroad into the factory. Union officials say workers have been brainwashed and that they will want to organize after a honeymoon period. But there is no enthusiasm for the union. One paint shop worker sum-med up what other Nissan staff said: "Having the union here would be like living with your mother-in-law. We don't need a third party to argue with. We all have our say and we run the place together.

The workers have adopted, and adapted, Japanese working practices. Some have been to Japan for part of their training. They are issued with three shirt-and-trouser blue suits, never called uniforms, with their first name embroidered on the chest. They are not obliged to wear them, but most do. But all over the factory are people

Mr Mycock, who granted his freedom with a wave from the dock, said afterwards: "I am bitter about Dr Clift's evidence and that of the police, I am in no way responsible for the crimes committed against this old lady. The murderer could still be at large."

Eight more cases are pending before the Court of Appea concerning evidence given by Dr Clift. He was suspended by the Home Office in 1977 and compulsorily retired in 1981 after the Scottish Court of Appeal concluded that he had been "discredited not only as a scientist but as a witness'

Earlier this year the Ombuds an criticized the Home Office for delays in investigating Dr Clift's work after his suspen-sion. The review considered 1,500 cases in which Dr Cliff had examined material and 129 instances when people were convicted after denying the offences.

Sixteen cases were referred by the Home Secretary to the Court of Appeal. Two did not want their cases reopened and three have not been traced. A further two cases are to be heard this month and six in the autumn. The people involved have been released, including a man who was given a life sentence for murder in 1970. The convictions included rape, burglary, grievous bodily harm and manslaughter.

thumpingly recorded discomusic alternating with an old-fashioned band, to orate before a wast flag-waving crowd, hundreds of television cameras, and thousands of impertinent reportorial notebooks, when much of the world has been at some length that you are a bore. An article on Mr Mondale's origins in the latest issue of the magazine New Republic, describing his native Minne-sota, observed: The dominant religion is Lutheranism, which stresses ritual, authority and social obligation. Most people are Scandinavian like Mondale, who finds the poetry of life fishing in the silence of the north woods."

One deduced from this that, had Mr Mondale played his cards right, or had his grandfather stayed at home, the Democratic candidate might instead have become a Norwegian Olaf Palme. Instead, this solitary fisherman of the North Woods, found himself in San Francisco. Moreover, he was heavily dependent on an un-Nordicsounding woman named Mrs Ferraro.

More difficult still, he had to address this heaving mass of, among others, blacks, Hispanics and gays. Worse. they were all jumping up and down to this animalistic o tune called "Celebration". This seems to have replaced the Rooseveltian "Happy Days Are Here Again", as the party's theme song, which change is further proof of the Decline of the West.

The speech, then, was the supreme test of Mr Marty Kaplan Allers now turned to Kaplan. All ears now turned to him. He, we were informed by the San Francisco Chronicle, is Mr Mondale's chief speech writer. We must assume that Mr Kaplan is a second generation Norwegian. At some point, he would have New York-ized his name.

Early in the speech Kaplan emphasized how hard Mr Mondale had worked to learn the lessons of the party's

For the candi-It must have been a date told the crowd: "Some-monstrous ordeal to have one said to me: 'Fritz, are arrived, as Mr Mondale did on those bags under your eyes Thursday night, heralded by natural? And I said 'No, I got them the old-fashioned way. I carned them'." Having dealt with the question of how he looks on television. Mr Mondale moved on to lesser issues. They (the Reagan people) encouraged executives to vote themselves huge bonuses, while using King Kong tactics to make workers take Hong Kong wages. Mr Reagan believes that the genious of America is in the boardrooms and exclusive country clubs." There was also what seems to be an implicit threat to British export. Mr Reagan had given "his rich friends enough tax relief to buy a Rolls-Royce, and he asked your family to pay for the hug caps".

Mr Mondale was also effective on the budget deficit. Whoever was elected November, taxes would have to go up, he said. "Mr Reagan will raise taxes, and so will I. He won't tell you, I just did". Half the speech, then, was not the work of a bore. Mr

Mondale emerged as a considerable campaigner. But sadly it declined into an account of an America as a land sorely troubled. This is against the evidence of in-flation, unemployment, opinion polls and above all the visitor's own eyes.

More worryingly for Americans, he said they must become better educated. They should watch less television, he advised those of his television audience who, by this stage of the speech, had not taken this advice already. Kids must do their homework" demanded, with some bathos, this Would-be leader of

A Mondale administration. then, would be a grim one for all devotees of American culture. But then Mr Mondale and Mr Kaplan splendid though their speech was in the more rascally political passages, were working under the gloomy influence of their national bard.
